District of Pennsylvania, to wit :

BE IT REMEMBERED, that on the Seventeenth day of December in the Twenty-ninth year of Independence of the United States of America, A. D. 1804. Jacob Johnson of the said District deposited in this Office the Title of a Book the right whereof he claims as Proprietor in the words following to wit :

“A Dictionary of the English Language: in which the words are deduced from their original, explained in their different meanings, and authorised by the names of the writers in whose works they are found. Abstracted from the Folio Edition, by the author Samuel Johnson, A. M. To which are prefixed, a Grammar of the English Language, and the Preface to the Folio Edition. The whole improved by the Standard of Pronunciation, established in the Critical Pronouncing Dictionary of John Walker, author of Elements of Elocution, Rhyming Dictionary, &c. &c.”

In conformity to an Act of the Congress of the United States, entitled “An Act for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of Maps, Charts, and Books to the authors and proprietors of such copies during the times therein mentioned.” And also to the Act entitled “An Act supplementary to an Act for the encouragement of learning by securing the copies of Maps, Charts, and Books to the authors and proprietors of such copies during the times therein mentioned,” and extending the said Acts to the Arts of designing, engraving, and etching, historical and other prints.

THE improved Edition of Johnson's Dictionary which is now offered to the Publick, has some advantages over every other that has heretofore appeared ; which, the Editors hope, will ensure it a just and general preference.

An union of certain rules of pronunciation with Johnson's ample definitions and authorities, is a form in which the Octavo Edition has never appeared ; and is sufficient, the Editors presume, to found their pretensions to originality and improvement.

In noting the Pronunciation, Walker's Critical Pronouncing Dictionary has been the general guide ; but where words occurred not to be found in that (of which the instances were numerous) other sources have been investigated, particularly Marchbank's Quarto Edition of 1798, and the pronunciation of those words carefully regulated by Walker's direction.

In point of correctness, the Editors consider themselves justified, from the unremitting attention bestowed upon the work, to claim for it a preeminence over every Edition which has come within their notice. In the course of the work, different Editions of Johnson's Dictionary were often consulted ; and, that the derivations might be as correct as possible, frequent recurrence was had to the most approved Dictionaries of the foreign languages, in which the original words are found, especially the Greek, Latin, French and German.

That it is entirely faultless is not to be expected ; but it is certainly free from many inaccuracies which appear in the various Editions with which it was compared.

A TABLE

OF THE SIMPLE AND DIPHTHONGAL VOWELS,

Referred to by the Figures over the Letters in this Dictionary.

ENGLISH SOUNDS.	FRENCH SOUNDS.
1. \hat{a} . The long slender English a , as in fâte , pâ-per , &c.	} é in fee , ephée . } a in fable , rable . } â in âge , Châlons . } a in fat , matin .
2. \hat{a} . The long Italian a , as in fâr , fâ-ther , pa-pâ , mam-mâ .
3. \hat{a} . The broad German a , as in fâll , wâll , wà-ter .
4. \hat{a} . The short sound of the Italian a , as in fât , mât , mâr-ry .
1. \acute{e} . The long e , as in mê , hère , mê-tre , mê-di um ,	} i in mitre , epître . } e in mette , nette .
2. \acute{e} . The short e , as in mêt , lêt , gêt .
1. \hat{i} . The long diphthongal i , as in pînc , titic .	} ai in lâique , daif . } i in inné , titré .
2. \hat{i} . The short simple i , as in pîn , tit-tie .
1. \hat{o} . The long open o , as in nô , nôte , nô-tice .	} o in globe , lobe . } ou in mouvoir , pouvoir . } o in or , for , encor . } o in hotte , cotte .
2. \hat{o} . The long close o , as in môve , prôve .
3. \hat{o} . The long broad o , as in nôr , fôr , ôr ; like the broad \hat{a} .
4. \hat{o} . The short broad o , as in nôt , hôt , ôt .
1. \hat{u} . The long diphthongal u , as in tûbe , cû-pid .	} iou in Cioutat , chiourme . } eu in neuf , veuf . } ou in boule , foule , houle .
2. \hat{u} . The short simple u , as in tûb , cûp , sûp .
3. \hat{u} . The middle or obtuse u , as in bûll , fûll , pûll .
\hat{oi} . The long broad o , and the short i , as in ôi .	} oi in cyclôide , heroïque . } oaû in oaûte .
\hat{ou} . The long broad o , and the middle obtuse u , as in thôû , pòund .

Th. The acute sharp th, as in think, thin.

TH. The grave or flat TH, as in THis, THat.

When G is printed in the Roman character, it has its hard sound in get, gone, &c. as go, give, geese, &c.; when it has its soft sound, it is spelled in the notation by the consonant J, as giant, ginger, ji-ant, jin-ger. The same may be observed of S: the Roman character denotes its hard sound in sin, sun, &c. as so, sit, sense, &c.; its soft sound is spelled by z, as rose, raise, &c. rozic, raze, &c.

PREFACE.

HAVING been long employed in the study and cultivation of the English language, I lately published a Dictionary like those compiled by the academics of Italy and France, for the use of such as aspire to exactness of criticism, or elegance of style.

But it has been since considered that works of that kind are by no means necessary to the greater number of readers, who, seldom intending to write or presuming to judge, turn over books only to amuse their leisure, and to gain degrees of knowledge suitable to lower characters, or necessary to the common business of life: these know not any other use of a dictionary than that of adjusting orthography, and explaining terms of science or words of infrequent occurrence, or remote derivation.

For these purposes many dictionaries have been written by different authors, and with different degrees of skill; but none of them have yet fallen into my hands by which even the lowest expectations could be satisfied. Some of their authors wanted industry, and others literature: some knew not their own defects, and others were too idle to supply them.

For this reason a small dictionary appeared yet to be wanting to common readers; and, as I may, without arrogance, claim to myself a longer acquaintance with the lexicography of our language than any other writer has had, I should be to be considered as having more experience, at least than most of my predecessors, and as more likely to accommodate the nation with a vocabulary of daily use. I therefore offer to the Publick an Abbréviation of a prose or my former Work.

In comparing this with other dictionaries of the same kind, it will be found to have several advantages.

I. It contains many words not to be found in any other.

II. Many barbarous terms and phrases by which other dictionaries may vitiate the style, are rejected from this.

III. The words are more correctly spelled, partly by attention to their etymology, and partly by observation of the practice of the best authors.

IV. The etymologies and derivations, whether from foreign languages or from native roots, are more diligently traced, and more distinctly noted.

V. The senses of each word are more copiously enumerated, and more clearly explained.

VI. Many words occurring in the elder authors, such as Spenser, Shakspeare, and Milton, which had been hitherto omitted, are here carefully inserted; so that this book may serve as a glossary or expository index to the poetical writers.

VII. To the words, and to the different senses of each word, are subjoined from the large dictionary the names of those writers by whom they have been used; so that the reader who knows the different periods of the language, and the time of its authors, may judge of the elegance or prevalence of any word, or meaning of a word; and without recurring to other books, may know what are antiquated, what are unusual, and what are recommended by the best authority.

The words of this Dictionary, as opposed to others, are more diligently collected, more accurately spelled, more faithfully explained, and more authentically ascertained. Of an abstract it is not necessary to say more: and I hope it will not be found that truth requires me to say less.

PREFACE

TO THE FOLIO EDITION.

IT is the fate of those who toil at the lower enjoyments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the prospect of good; to be exposed to censure without hope of praise; to be disgraced by miscarriage, or punished for neglect, where success would have been without applause, and diligence without reward.

Among these unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries, whom mankind have considered, not as the pupil, but as the slave of science, the pioneer of literature, doomed only to receive rubbish and clear obstructions from the paths of Learning and Genius, who pres forward to conquest and glory, without bestowing a smile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progress. Every other author may aspire to praise; the lexicographer can only hope to escape reproach; and even this negative recompense has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithstanding this discouragement, attempted a dictionary of the English language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every species of literature, has itself been hitherto neglected, suffered to spread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance, resigned to the tyranny of time and fashion, and exposed to the corruption of ignorance, and caprices of innovation.

When I took the first survey of my undertaking, I found our speech copious without order, and energetical without rules; wherever I turned my view, there was perplexity to be disentangled and confusion to be regulated; choice was to be made out of boundless variety, without any established principle of selection; and alterations were to be detected, without a settled test of purity; and modes of expression to be rejected or received, without the suffrage of any writers of classical reputation or acknowledged authority.

Having therefore no assistance but from general criticism, I applied myself to the perusal of our writers; and noting whatever might be of use to ascertain or illustrate any word or phrase accumulated in time, the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, embossing to myself in the progress of the work, such rules as experience and analogy suggested to me; experience, when practice and observation were continually increasing; and analogy, which, though in some words obsolete, was evident in others.

In adjusting the ORTHOGRAPHY, which has been to this time unsettled and fluctuating, I found it necessary to distinguish those irregularities that are inherent in our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it, from others which the ignorance or negligence of later writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies, which though inconvenient, and in themselves unnecessary, must be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which require only to be registered, that they may not be increased; and ascertained, that they may not be confounded; but every language has likewise its improprieties and absurdities, which it is the duty of the Lexicographer to correct or suppress.

As language was at its beginning merely used, all words of necessity or common use were spoken before they were written; and while they were unfix'd by any visible sign, must have been spoken with great diversity, as we now observe those who cannot read to catch sounds imperfectly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous jargon was first reduced to an alphabet, every person endeavoured to express, as he could, the sounds which he was accustomed to pronounce; and received, and vitiated in writing such words as were already vivified in speech. The powers of letters, when they were applied to a new language, must have been vague and unsettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the same sound by different combination.

From this uncertain pronunciation arise, in a great part, the various dialects of the same country, which will always be observed to grow fewer, and less different, as books are multiplied; and from this arbitrary representation of sounds by letters, proceeds that diversity of spelling observable in the Saxon remains, and I suppose in the first book of every nation, which perplexes or destroys industry, and produces monstrous formations, which, when once incorporated, can never be afterwards eradicated or reformed.

Of this kind are the derivatives Length from long, strength from strong, charlote from dear, bread from brood, from dry, draught, and from high, height, which Milton, in re. Facinus pp. writes height find to exempta juxta spinis de pluribus modis: to change all would be too much, and to change one is nothing.

This uncertainty is most iniquitous in the vowels, which are so capriciously pronounced, and so differently modified by accent or affixation, not only in every province, but in every month, that to them, as is well known to etymologists, little regard is to be shewn in the definition of any language from another.

Such defects are not errors in orthography, but spots of barbarism imposed so deep in the English language, that criticism can never wash them away; these, therefore, must be permitted to remain untouched; but many words have likewise been altered by accident, or deprived by ignorance, as the pronunciation of the vulgar has been weakly followed; and some still continue to be variously written, as authors differ in their care or skill: of these it was proper to inquire the true orthography, which I have always considered as depending on their derivation, and have therefore retained the number of their original language; thus I write enchant, enchantment, enchanter, after the French, and in a much after the Latin; thus entice, is chosen rather than intice, because it passed to us not from the Latin, intice, but from the French, entice.

Of many words it is difficult to say whether they were immediately received from the Latin or the French, since at the time when we had dominion in France, we had Latin service in our church: it is, however, my opinion, that the French generally supplied us; for we have few Latin words, among the terms of domestick use, which are not French; which are very remote from Latin.

Even in words of which the derivation is apparent, I have been often obliged to sacrifice orthography to custom; thus I write, in compliance with our double marriage, husband, bride, husband, and bride.

know to be proper, though I could not at present support them by authorities, I have suffered to stand upon my own attestation, claiming the same privilege with my predecessors of being sometimes credited without proof.

The words thus selected and disposed, are grammatically considered: they are referred to the different parts of speech; traced when they are irregularly inflected, through their various terminations, and illustrated by observations, not indeed of great or striking importance, separately considered, but necessary to the elucidation of our language, and hitherto neglected or forgotten by English grammarians.

The part of my work on which I expect malignity most vehemently to fasten, is the Explanation; in which I cannot hope to satisfy those who are perhaps not inclined to be pleased, since I have not always been able to satisfy myself. To interpret a language by itself is very difficult; many words cannot be explained by synonyms, because the idea signified by them has not more than one appellation: nor by paraphrase, because simple ideas cannot be described. When the nature of things is unknown, or the notion unsettled and indefinite, and various in various minds, the words by which such notions are conveyed, or such things denoted, will be ambiguous and perplexed. And such is the fate of hapless lexicography, that not only darkness, but light, impedes and distresses it; things may be not only too little, but too much known, to be happily illustrated. To explain, requires the use of terms less abstract than that which is to be explained, and such terms cannot always be found; for as nothing can be proved but by supposing something intuitively known, and evident without proof, so nothing can be defined but by the use of words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the sense is too subtle and evanescent to be found in a paraphrase; such are all those which are by the grammarians termed expletives, and in dead languages, are suffered to pass for empty sounds, of no other use than to fill a verse, or to modulate a period, but which are easily perceived in living tongues to have power and emphasis, though it be sometimes such as no other form of expression can convey.

My labour has likewise been much increased by a class of verbs too frequent in the English language, of which the signification is so loose and general, the use so vague and indeterminate, and the senses detorted so widely from the first idea, that it is hard to trace them, through the maze or variation, to catch them on the brink of uttering, to circumscribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of distinct and settled meaning: such are bear, break, come, cost, fill, get, give, do, put, set, go, run, make, take, turn, throw. If of these the whole power is not accurately delivered, it must be remembered that while our language is yet living, and variable by the caprice of every one that speaks it, these words are hourly shifting their relations, and can no more be ascertained in a dictionary, than a grove, in the agitation of a storm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are among all nations supplied with so great latitude, that they are not easily reducible under any regular scheme of explanation; this difficulty is not less, nor perhaps greater, in English than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence. I hope with success: such at least as can be expected in a task, which no man, however learned or sagacious, has yet been able to perform.

Some words there are which I cannot explain, because I do not understand them; these might have been omitted very often with little inconvenience, but I would not so far indulge my vanity as to decline this confession; for when Tully owns himself ignorant whether hæsus, in the twelve tables means a funeral song, or mourning garment; and Aristotle doubts who the cupido, in the Iliad, signifies a mule, or muleter, I may truly, without shame, have some obscurities to happier industry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation, and the word explained, should be always reciprocal; this I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are seldom exactly synonymous; a new term was not introduced, but because the former was thought inadequate; names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was then necessary to use the proximate word, for the deficiency of single terms can very seldom be supplied by circumscription; nor is the inconvenience great of such mutilated interpretations, because the sense may easily be collected entire from the examples.

In every word of extensive use, it was requisite to mark the progress of its meaning, and show by what gradations of intermediate sense, it has passed from its primitive to its remote and accidental signification; so that every foregoing explanation should tend to that which follows, and the series be regularly concatenated from the first notion to the last.

This is specious, but not always practicable; kindred senses may be so interwoven, that the perplexity cannot be disentangled, nor any reason be assigned why one should be ranged before the other. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications, how can a consecutive series be formed of senses in their nature collateral? The shades of meaning sometimes pass into perceptibly into each other; so that though on one side they apparently differ, yet it is possible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the same race, though not exactly alike, are sometimes so little different, that no words can express their dissimilitude, though the mind easily perceives it, when they are exhibited to ether; and sometimes there is such a confusion of perceptions, that discernment is wearied, and distinction puzzled, and perseverance herself hurries to an end, by crowding together what she cannot separate.

These complaints of difficulty will, by those that have never considered words beyond their popular use, be thought only the jargon of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his studies by involution and obscurity. But every art is obscure to those who have not learned it; this uncertainty of terms, and commixture of ideas, is well known to those who have joined philosophy with grammar; and if I have not expressed them very clearly, it must be remembered that I am speaking of that which words are insufficient to explain.

The original sense of words is often driven out of use by their metaphorical acceptations, yet must be inserted for the sake of a regular origination. Thus I know not whether ardour is used for material heat, or whether flourant, in English, ever signifies the same with burning; yet such are the primitive ideas of these words, which are therefore set first, though without examples, that the figurative senses may be commodiously deduced.

Such is the exuberance of signification which many words have obtained, that it was scarcely possible to collect all their senses; sometimes the meaning of derivatives must be sought in the mother term, and sometimes deficient explanations of the primitive may be supplied in the train of derivation. In any case of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the same race; for some words are slightly passed over to avoid repetition, some admitted easier and clearer explanation than others, and all will be better understood, as they are considered in a greater variety of structures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the same skill, or the same happiness; things equally easy in themselves, are not all equally easy to any single mind. Every writer of a long work commits errors, when there appears neither ambiguity to mislead, nor obscurity to confound him; and in a search like this, many felicities of expression will be casually overlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.

But many seeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking, than the negligence of the performer. Thus some explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as hand, the female of the stag; stag, the male of the hind: sometimes easier words are changed into harder, as burial into sepulture or entombment, drier into desiccative, dryness into aridity or aridity, fit into paroxysm: for the easiest word, whatever it be, can never be translated into one more easy.

But eunuchs and difficulty are necessarily joint, and the present prevalence of our language should invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be assisted by those words which now seem only to increase or produce obscurity. For this reason I have not omitted to give to you Terminæ and Idiomata interpretation, as to CHERUB, to gabriel, or to seraph, that every variety of Anglicana may be assisted by its own language.

The summary of all definitions, and the supply of all defects, must be sought in the examples, subjoined to the various parts, yet each word, and arranged in order, is to be read in its own class.

When I first conceived these authorities, I was desirous that every quotation should be useful to some other, and that the illustration of a word I should extract from particular principles of science; from Esurians remarkable facts; from chemists complete processes; from divines striking exhortation; and from poets beautiful descriptions. My plan is desirous, while it is yet in a distance from execution. When the time called upon me to write, this accumulation of elegance and wisdom, to an alphabetical series, I soon discovered that the bulk of my volume would be thirteen times the study, and was forced to depart from my scheme of including all that was pleasing or useful in English literature, and reduce my transcripts very often to clusters of words, in which scarcely any meaning is found; thus to the weariness of copying I was condemned to add the vexation of expurgating. Some passages I have yet spared, which may relieve the labour of verbal searches, and interpose with verdure and flowers the dusty deserts of barren philosophy.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be considered as conveying the sentiments or doctrine of their authors; the word for the sake of which they are inserted, with a few appendicular clauses, has been carefully preserved; but it may sometimes happen, by hasty abbreviation, that the general tendency of the sentence may be changed: the divine may desert his tenets, or the philosopher his system.

Some of the examples have been taken from writers who were never mentioned as masters of elegance or models of style; but words must be sought where they are used; not in what is great, eminent for purity, can terms of manufacture or agriculture be found? Many quotations serve no other purpose than that of proving the bare existence of words, and are therefore selected with less scrupulousness than those which are to teach their structures and relations.

My purpose was to admit no testimony of any living authors that I might not be misled by partiality, and that none of my contemporaries might have reason to complain; nor have I departed from this resolution, but when some performance of uncommon excellence excited my veneration, when my memory supplied me, from late books, with an example that was wanting, or when my heart, in the endearment of friendship, solicited admission for a favourite name.

So far have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have studiously endeavoured to collect examples and authorities from the writers before the restoration, whose works I regard as the verba of English undisturbed, as the pure sources of Terminæ and Idiomata. Our language, for almost a century, has, by the concurrence of many causes, been gradually departing from its origin: I Terminæ extract it, and, deviating towards a Gothic structure and phraseology, from which I thought to be our endeavour to recast it by making our ancient volumes the groundwork of style, admitting and rejecting the additions of later times, only such as may supply real deficiencies; such as are readily adopted by the organs of our tongue, and incorporate easily without any idiomata.

But as every language has a time of ruleless antecedent to perfection, as well as of false refinement and declension, I have been cautious lest my zeal for antiquity might drive me into terms too remote, and crowd my book with words now no longer understood. I have fixed Samuel's work for the hour day, beyond which I make few excursions. From the authors which rose in the time of Elizabeth, a speech might be formed adequate to all the purposes of use and elegance. If the language of theology were extracted from Hooker and the translation of the Bible; the terms of natural knowledge from Leaen; the phrases of policy, war, and navigation from Rabrich; the dialect of poetry and fiction from Keenser and Sidney, and the diction of common life from Shakespeare, few ideas would be lost to mankind, for want of English words, in which they might be expressed.

It is not sufficient that a word is found, unless it be so combined, as that its meaning is apparently determined by the tract and tenour of the sentence; such passages I have therefore chosen, and when it happened that any author given definition of a term, or such an explanation as is equivalent to a definition, I have placed his authority as a supplement to my own, without regard to the chronological order, that is otherwise observed.

Some words, indeed, stand unsupported by any authority, but they are commonly derivative nouns or adverbs, formed from their primitives by regular and constant analogy, or names of things seldom occurring in books, or words of which I have reason to doubt the existence.

There is more danger of censure from the multiplicity than paucity of example; authorities will sometimes seem to have been accumulated without necessity or use, and perhaps some will be found, which might, without loss, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not hastily to be charged with superfluities: those quotations which to careless or unskilful persons appear only to repeat the same sense, will often exhibit to a more accurate examiner, diversities of signification, or, at least afford different shades of the same meaning; one will show the word applied to persons, another to things; one will express an ill, another a good, and a third a neutral sense; one will prove the expression genuine from an ancient author; another will show it elegant from a modern; a doubtful authority corroborated by one of more credit; an ambiguous sentence is ascertained by a passage clear and determinate; the word, how often soever repeated, appears with new associates and in different combinations, and every quotation contributes something to the stability or enlargement of the language.

When words are used equivalently, I receive them in either sense; when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptation.

I have sometimes, though rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of sentiments by showing how one author copied the thoughts and diction of another: such quotations are indeed little more than repetitions, which might justly be excused, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual history.

The various syntactical structures occurring in the examples have been carefully noted; the license or negligence with which many words have been hitherto used, has made our style capricious and indeterminate; when the different combinations of the same word are exhibited together, the preference is readily given to propriety, and I have often endeavoured to direct the choice.

Thus have I laboured by settling the orthography, displaying the analogy, regulating the structure, and ascertaining the signification of English words, to perform all the parts of a faithful lexicographer; but I have not always executed my own scheme, or satisfied my own expectations. The work, whatever proofs it

Diligence and attention it may exhibit, is yet capable of many improvements: the orthography which I recommend is still controvertible, the etymology which I adopt is uncertain, and perhaps frequently erroneous; the explanations are sometimes too much contracted, and sometimes too much diffused, the significations are distinguished rather with subtilty than skill, and the attention is harassed with unnecessary minutness.

The examples are too often injudiciously truncated, and perhaps sometimes, I hope very rarely, alleged in a mistaken sense; for in making this collection I trust I more to memory, than, in a state of disquiet and embarrassment, memory can contain, and purposed to supply at the review what was left incomplete in the first transcription.

Many terms appropriated to particular occupations, though necessary and significant, are undoubtedly omitted; and of the words most suitably considered and exemplified, many senses have escaped observation.

Yet these failures, however frequent, may admit extension and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprise is above the strength that undertakes it: To rest below his own aim is incident to every one whose fancy is active, and whose views are comprehensive; nor is any man satisfied with himself because he has done much, but because he can conceive little. When first I engaged in this work, I resolved to leave neither words nor things unexamined, and pleased myself with a prospect of the hours which I should reel away in lists of literature, the obscure recesses of northern learning which I should enter and ransack, the treasures with which I expected every search into those neglected mines to reward my labour, and the triumph with which I should display my acquisitions to mankind. When I had thus inquired into the original words, I resolved to show likewise my attention to things; to piece de p into every science, to inquire the nature of every substance of which I inscribed the name, to limit every idea by a definition strictly logical, and exhibit every production of art or nature in an accurate description, that my book might be in place of all other dictionaries, whether appellative or technical. But these were the dreams of a poet doomed at last to wake a lexicographer. I soon found that it is too late to look for instruments, when the work calls for execution; and that whatever abilities I had brought to my task, with those I must finally perform it. To deliberate whenever I doubted, to inquire whenever I was ignorant, would have protracted the undertaking without end, and, perhaps, without much improvement; for I did not find by my first experiments that what I had not of my own was easily to be obtained: I saw that one inquiry only gave occasion to another, that book referred to book, that to search was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed; and that thus to pursue perfection was, like the first inhabitants of Arcadia, to chase the sun, which, when they had reached the hill where he seemed to rest, was still beheld at the same distance from them.

I then contracted my design, determining to confide in myself, and no longer to solicit auxiliaries, which produced more inconvenience than assistance; by this I obtained at least one advantage, that I set limits to my work, which would in time be ended, though not completed.

Dependency has never so far prevailed as to depress me to negligence; some faults will at last appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and persevering activity. The nice and subtle ramifications of meaning were not easily avoided by a mind intent upon accuracy, and convinced of the necessity of disentangling combinations, and separating similitudes. Many of the distinctions which to common readers appear useless and idle, will be found real and important by men versed in the school of philosophy, without which no dictionary can ever be accurately compiled, or skillfully examined.

Some senses however there are, which though not the same, are yet so nearly allied, that they are often confounded. Most men think indistinctly, and therefore cannot speak with exactness; and consequently some examples might be indifferently put to either signification; this uncertainty is not to be imputed to me, who do not form, but register the language; who do not teach men how they should think, but relate how they have hitherto expressed their thoughts.

The imperfect sense of some examples I lamented but could not remedy, and hope they will be compensated by innumerable passages selected with propriety, and preserved with exactness; some, shining with sparks of imagination, and some replete with treasures of wisdom.

The orthography and etymology, though imperfect, are not imperfect for want of care, but because care will not always be successful, and recollection or information come too late for use.

That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, must be frankly acknowledged; but for this defect I may boldly allege that it was unavoidable. I could not visit caverns to learn the miner's language, nor take a voyage to perfect my skill in the dialect of navigation, nor visit the warehouses of merchants, and shops of artificers, to gain the names of wares, tools, and operations of which no mention is found in books; what favourable accident, or easy inquiry brought within my reach, has not been neglected; but it had been a hopeless labour to glean up words, by courting living information, and contesting with the sullenness of one, and the roughness of another.

To furnish the academicians della Crusca with words of this kind, a series of comedies called la Fiara or the Fair, was professedly written by Buonotici; but I had no such assistant, and therefore was content to want what they must have wanted likewise, had they not luckily been so supplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be lamented as omissions. Of the laborious and mercantile part of the people, the diction is in a great measure casual and mutable; many of their terms are formed for some temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a state of increase or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore must be suffered to perish with other things unworthy of preservation.

Care will sometimes betray to the appearance of negligence. He that is catching opportunities which seldom occur, will suffer those to pass by unregarded, which he expects hourly to return; he that is searching for rare and remote things, will neglect those that are obvious and familiar; thus many of the most common and cursory words have been inserted with little illustration, because in gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy those which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection I found the word DEA unexemplified.

Thus it happens that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things easy from confidence; the mind, afraid of greatness, and disdainful of littleness, hastily withdraws herself from painful searches, and passes with scornful rapidity over tasks not adequate to her powers, sometimes too secure for caution, and again too anxious for vigour; oftentimes tulle in a plain path, and sometimes distracted in labyrinth, and dissipated by different intentions.

A large work is difficult because it is large, even though all its parts might singly be performed with facility; where there are many things to be done, each must be allowed its share of time and labour, in the proportion only which it bears to the whole; nor can it be expected, that the stones which form the dome of a temple, should be squared and polished like the diamond of a ring.

PREFACE.

Of the extent of this work, for which, having laboured it with so much application, I cannot but have some degree of parental fondness, it is natural to form conjectures. Those who have been persuaded to think well of my design, will require that it should fix our language, and put a stop to those alterations which time and chance have hitherto been suffered to make in it without opposition. With this consequence I will confess that I flattered myself for a while; but now begin to fear that I have indulg'd expectation which neither reason nor experience can justify. When we see men grow old and die at a certain time one after another, from century to century, we laugh at the chime that promises to prolong life to a thousand years, and with equal justice may the lexicographer be derided, who being able to produce no example of a nation that has preserved their words and phrases from mutability, shall imagine that his dictionary can enchain his language, and secure it from corruption and decay; that it is in his power to change arbitrary nature, and clear the world at once from folly, vanity, and affectation.

With this hope, however, academies have been instituted, to guard the avenues of their languages, to restrain fugitives, and repulse intruders; but their vigilance and activity have hitherto been vain; words are too volatile and subtle for legal restraints; to enclose syllables, and to lash the wind, are equally the undertakings of pride, unwilling to measure its desires by its strength. The French language has visibly changed under the inspection of the academy; the style of Amelot's translation of father Pu is observed by Le Courayer to be un peu passy; and no Trojan will maintain, that the diction of any modern writer is not perceptibly different from that of Bucchare, Machiavel, or Caro.

Total and sudden transformations of a language seldom happen; conquests and migrations are now very rare; but there are other causes of change, which, though slow in their operation and invisible in their progress, are perhaps, as much superior to human resistance, as the revolutions of the sky or intumescence of the tide. Commerce, however necessary, however lucrative, as it d'praves the manners, corrupts the language; they that have frequent intercourse with strangers, to whom they endeavour to accommodate themselves, must in time learn a mingled dialect, like the jargon which serves the traffickers on the Mediterranean and Indiatic coasts. This will not always be confined to the exchange, the warehouse, or the port, but will be communicated by degrees to other ranks of the people, and be at last incorporated with the current speech.

There are likewise internal causes equally forcible. The language most likely to continue long without alteration, would be that of a nation raised a little, and but a little, above barbarity, secluded from strangers, and totally employed in procuring the conveniences of life; either without books, or, like some of the Mahometan countries, with very few; in this busied and unlearned, having only such words as common use requires, would perhaps long continue to express the same notions by the same signs. But no such constancy can be expected in a people polish'd by arts, and classed by subordination, where one part of the community is sustained and accommodated by the labour of the other. Those who have much leisure to think, will always be enlarging the stock of ideas, and every increase of knowledge, whether real or fancied, will produce new words or combinations of words. When the mind is unchain'd from a necessity, it will range after convenience; when it is left at large in the fields of speculation, it will suit opinions; as any custom is disused, the words that expressed it must perish with it; as any opinion grows popular, it will innovate speech in the same proportion as it alters practice.

As by the cultivation of various sciences, a language is amplified, it will be more furnished with words deflected from their original sense; the geom'etrian will talk of a courtier's zenith, or the ecclesiastic of a wild hero, and the physician of various expectations and p'ilematic delays. Copiousness of speech will give opportunities to capricious choice, by which some words will be preferred and others discarded, vicissitudes of fashion will encrease the use of new, or extend the signification of known terms. The topics of poetry will make hoary enervations, and the metaphorical will become the current sense; pronunciation will be varied by levity and ignorance, and the pen must at length comply with the tongue; illiterate writers will at one time or other, introduce innovations, rise into renown, who not knowing the original import of words will use them with colloquial licentiousness, confound distinction, and forget propriety. As politeness increases, some expressions will be considered as too gross and vulgar for the delicate; others are too formal and cere'cerous for the gay and airy; new phrases are therefore adopted, which, as fast as the same reasons, so in time dismis'd. Swift, in his p'ty to arise on the English language, allows that new words must be introduced, but proposes that none should be suffered to become obsolete. But what makes a word obsolete more than general agreement to forsake it, and how shall it be continued, when it conveys an offensive idea, or recalls a pain into the mouth of disorder, when it has once become unfamiliar by disuse, and unpleasant by unfamiliarity.

There is another cause of alteration more prevalent than any other, which yet in the present state of the world cannot be obviated. A mixture of two languages will produce a third; if that third and a fourth, will always be mixed, where the chief part of education, and the most conspicuous respect, are still in ancient or in foreign tongues. If that, as languages and words are mixed, of both its words and combinations crowd upon his one way, and taste, and negligence, retire into a third definition, will obscure borrowed terms and exotick expressions.

The great part of speech is frequently a translation. No word was ever taken from one language into another, without imparting something of its native language; this is the vast intusiveness and cankerous innovation; single words may enter by translation, and the diction of the tongue resemble the same; but new phrasology changes much at once; it enters not in single words of the outline, but the sense of the columns. If an act clearly should be established for the cultivation of a language, which I, who can never wish to see dependent on a stippled hope, do not think of, you may, you may, destroy that, instead of compiling grammars and dictionaries, undertake with all their industry, to stop the licence of translators, whose ill-sense and ignorance, it is so far from producing, and evidence to establish, that of the world.

If the changes that we fear of this intusiveness, what is said is but to require me to make good in the other instrument the distress of humanity. It remains that we stand what we can do, and that we can do, what we cannot cure. Life may be lengthen'd by care, though health cannot be ultimately preserv'd; tongues, like governments, have a natural tendency to degeneration; we have preserv'd our constitution, let us make some struggles for our language.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted this book, the labour of years, to the honour of my country, that we may no longer yield the palm of antiquity, without a contest, to the natives of the continent. The chief glory of every people lies in its own antiquity, whether I shall add any thing by my own writings to the reputation of English literature, must be left to time; much of my life has been lost under the pressure of distress; much has been trid away; and much has always been spent in provision for the day that was passing over me; but I shall not think my employment useless or unprofitable, if by assisting foreign nations, and distant ages, to preserve the propagators of knowledge, and understand the reasons, a truth if my labour afford light to the repositories of science, and add a brillity to Baron, to Hooker, to Milton, and to Bayle.

When I am animated by this wish, I look with pleasure on my book, however defective, and depart to the world with the spirit of a man that has endeavoured well. That it will happily become popular, I have not promis'd to myself; a few well-bounded, and visible alterations, from which no work of such multiplicity was ever free, may for a time turn us folly with laughter, and harden ignorance in contempt; but useful diligence will at last prevail, and there never can be wanting some who distinguish desert, who will consider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, since while it is hastening to publication some words are budding, and some falling away; that a whole life cannot be spent upon syntax and etymology, and that even a whole life would not be sufficient: that he, whose design includes whatever language can express, must often speak of what he does not understand; that a writer will sometimes be hurried by eagerness to the end, and sometimes faint with weariness under a task, which Scaliger compares to the labours of the anvil and the mill; that what is obvious is not always known, and what is known is not always present; that sudden fits of inadvertency will surprise vigilance, slight avocations will seduce attention, and casual eclipses of the mind will darken learning; and that the writer shall often in vain trace his memory at the moment of need, for that which yesterday he knew with intuitive readiness, and which will come uncalled into his thoughts to-morrow.

In this work, when it shall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewise is performed; and though no book was ever spared out of tenderness to the author, and the world is little solicitous to know whence proceeded the faults of that which it condemns; yet it may gratify curiosity to inform it, that the English Dictionary with little assistance of the learned, and without any patronage of the great; not in the soft obscurities of retirement, or under the shelter of academick bowers, but amidst inconvenience and distraction, in sickness and in sorrow. It may repress the triumph of malignant criticism to observe, that if our language is not here fully displayed, I have only failed in an attempt which no human powers have hitherto completed. If the lexicons of ancient tongues, now immutably fixed, and comprised in a few volumes, be yet, after the toil of successive ages, inadequate and oblique; if the aggregated knowledge, and co-operating diligence of the Italian academicians did not secure them from the censure of Bentley; if the embodied critics of France, when fifty years had been spent upon their work, were obliged to change its economy, and give their second edition another form, I may surely be contented without the praise of perfection, which if I could obtain, in this gloom of solitude, what would it avail me? I have protracted my work till most of those whom I wished to please, have sunk into the grave, and success and miscarriage are empty sounds: I therefore dismiss it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from censure or from praise.

GRAMMAR

OF THE

ENGLISH TONGUE.

GRAMMAR which is the art of using words properly, comprises four parts: Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Prosody.

In this division and order of the parts of grammar I follow the common grammarians, without inquiring whether a fitter distribution might not be found. Experience has long shewn this method to be so distinct as to obviate confusion, and so comprehensive as to prevent any inconvenient omissions. I likewise use the terms already received, and already understood, though perhaps others more proper might sometimes be invented. Syburgius, and other innovators, whose new terms have sunk their learning into neglect, have left sufficient warning against the trifling ambition of teaching arts in a new language.

ORTHOGRAPHY is the art of combining letters into syllables, and syllables into words. It therefore teaches previously the form and sound of letters.

The letters of the English language are

To these may be added certain combinations of letters universally used in printing; as fi, ff, fl, fl, fil, and &c., or and per se, and, fi, ff, fl, fl, &c.

Our letters are commonly reckoned twenty-four, because anciently i and j, as well as u and v, were expressed by the same character; but as those letters which had always different powers; have now different forms, our alphabet may be properly said to consist of twenty-six letters.

Vowels are five; a, e, i, o, u.

Such is the number generally received; but for i it is the practice to write y in the end of words, as thy, holy; before i, as from die, dying; from beautify, beautifying; in the words says, days, eyes; and in words derived from the Greek, and written originally with ι, as system, συμπα; sympathy, συμπαιδια.

For u we often write w after a vowel, to make a diphthong; as raw, grew, view, row, flowing, lowness.

The sounds of all the letters are various.

In treating on the letters, I shall not, like some other grammarians, inquire into the original of their form as an antiquarian; nor into their formation and prolation by the organs of speech, as a mechanick, anatomist, or physiologist; nor into the properties and gradation of sounds, or the elegance or harshness of particular combinations, as a writer of universal and transcendental grammar. I consider the English alphabet only as it is English; and even in this narrow disquisition I follow the example of former grammarians, perhaps with more reverence than judgment, because by writing in English I suppose my reader already acquainted with the English language, and consequently able to pronounce the letters of which I teach the pronunciation; and because of sounds in general it may be observed, that words are unable to describe them. An account therefore of the primitive and simple letters is useless almost alike to those who know their sound, and those who know it not.

OF VOWELS.

A has three sounds, the slender, open, and broad.

A slender is found in most words, as face, mune; and in words ending in ation, as creation, salvation, generation.

The a slender is the proper English a, called very justly by Erpenius, in his Arabick Grammar, a Anglicum cum o mistum, as having a middle sound between the open a and the e. The French have a similar sound in the word pais, and in their e masculine.

A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly resembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, fancy, glass.

A broad resembles the a of the German; as all, wall, call.

Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as fault, vault; and we still say fault, vault. This was probably the Saxon sound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the rustick pronunciation; as maun for man, haund for hand.

The short a approaches to the a open, as grass.

The long a, if prolonged by e at the end of the word, is always slender, as graze, fame.

A forms a diphthong only with i or y, and u or w. Ai or ay, as in plain, wain, gay, clay, has only the sound of the long and slender a, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, wane.

Au or aw has the sound of the German a, as raw, naughty.

Ae is sometimes found in Latin words not completely naturalized or assimilated, but is no English diphthong, and is more properly expressed by single e, as Cesar, Eneas.

E.

E is the letter which occurs most frequently in the English language.

E is long, as in scene; or short, as in cellar, separate, celebrate, men, then.

It is always short before a double consonant, or two consonants, as in vex, perplexity, relent, medlar, reptile, serpent, cellar, cessation, blessing, fell, felling, debt.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monosyllables that have no other vowel, as the; or proper names, as Penelope, Phebe, Derbe; being used to modify the foregoing consonant, as since, once, hedge, oblige, or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as ban, bane; can, cane; pin, pine; tun, tune; rob, robe; pop, pope; fir, fire; cur, cure; tub, tube.

Almost all words which now terminate in consonants ended anciently in e, as year, yeare; wildness, wildnesse, which e probably had the force of the French e feminine, and constituted a syllable with its associate consonant; for in old editions, words are sometimes divided thus clear-re, fel-le, knowled-ge. This e was perhaps for a time vocal or silent in poetry, as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden in his Remains calls it the silent e.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glove, live, give.

It has sometimes in the end of words a sound obscure, and scarcely perceptible, as open, shapen, shotten, thistle, participle, metre, lucre.

This faintness of sound is found when e separates a mute from a liquid, as in rotten, or follows a mute and liquid, as in cattle.

E forms a diphthong with a, as near; with i, as deign, receive; and with u or w, as new, flew.

Ea sounds like e long, as mean: or like ee, as dear, clear, near.

Ei is sounded like e long, as seize, perceiving.

Eu sounds as u long and soft.

E, a, u, are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the sound of u.

E may be said to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agree, sleeping.

Eo is found in yeomen, where it is sounded as e short; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

I has a sound long as fine: and short as fin.

That is eminently observable in i, which may be likewise remarked in other letters, that the short sound is not the long sound contracted but a sound wholly different.

The long sound in monosyllables is always marked by the e final, as thin, thine.

I is often sounded before r, as a short u; as flirt, first, shirt.

It forms a diphthong only with e, as field, shield, which is sounded as the double ee, except friend, which is sounded as frënd.

I is joined with eu in lieu, and ew in view; which triphthongs are sounded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as bone, obedient, crowding; or short as block, knock, oblique, toll.

Women is pronounced wimèn.

The short o has sometimes the sound of a close u, as son, come.

O coalesces into a diphthong with e, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the sound of o long.

O is united to e in some words derived from the Greek, as economy; but e being not an English diphthong, they are better written as they are sounded, with only e, economy.

With i, as oil, soil, nail, noisome.

This coalition of letters seems to unite the sounds of the two letters as far as two sounds can be united without being destroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.

With o, as boot, hoot, cooler; oo has the sound of the Italian u.

With u or w, as our, power, flower; but in some words has only the sound of o long, as in soul, bowl, sow, grow. These different sounds are used to distinguish different significations as bow an instrument for shooting; bow a depression of the head; sow, the she of a boar; sow, to scatter seed; bowl, an orbicular body; bowl, a wooden vessel.

Ou is sometimes pronounced like o soft, as court; sometimes like o short, as cough, sometimes like u close, as could; or u open, as rough, tough, which use only can teach.

Ou is frequently used in the last syllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are made English, as honour, labour, favour, from honor, labor, favor.

Some late innovators have ejected the u without considering that the last syllable gives the sound neither of or nor ur, but a sound between them, if not compounded of both; besides that they are probably derived to us from the French nouns in eur, as honeur, faveur.

U.

U is long in use, confusion; or short, as us, concussion.

It coalesces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in these combinations the force of the w consonant, as quaff, quest, quit, quite, languish; sometimes in ui the i loses its sound, as in juice. It is sometimes mute before a, e, i, y, as guard, guest, guise, buy.

U is followed by e in virtue, but the e has no sound.

Ue is sometimes mute at the end of a word, in imitation of the French, as prologue, synagogue, plague, vague, harangue.

Y.

Y is a vowel, which, as Quintilian observes of one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It supplies the place of i at the end of words, as thy; before an i as ding; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as destroy destroyer; betray, betrayed, betrayed; pray, prayer; say, sayer; day, days.

I being the Saxon vowel y, which was commonly used where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

GENERAL RULES.

A vowel in the beginning or middle syllable before two consonants is commonly short, as opportunity.

In monosyllables a single vowel before a single consonant is short, as stag, frog.

Many is pronounced as if it were written manny.

OF CONSONANTS.

B.

B has one unvaried sound, such as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, subtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb.

It is used before i and v, as vault, obviate.

C.

C has before e and i the sound of s; as sincerely, centrick, century, circular, eastern, city, siccity; before a, o, and u, it sounds like k, as calm, conceal, copper, incorporate, curiosity, concupiscence.

C might be omitted in the language without loss, since one of its sounds might be supplied by s, and the other by k, but that it preserves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, captive from captivus.

Ch has a sound which is analysed into tsh, as church, chin, crutch. It is the same sound which the Italians give to the c simple before i and e, as citta, cerro.

Ch is sounded like k in words derived from the Greek, as chymist, scheme, cholera. Arch is commonly sounded ark before a vowel, as archangel, and with the English sound of ch before a consonant, as archbishop.

Ch, in some French words not yet assimilated, sound like sh, as machine, chaîne.

C, having no determinate sound, according to English orthography, never ends a word, therefore we write stick, clock, which were originally sticke, blocke. In such words C is now mute.

It is used before l and r, as clock, cross.

D.

D is uniform in its sound, as death, diligent.

It is used before r, as draw, dross; and w as dwell.

F.

F, though, having a name beginning with a vowel, it is numbered by the grammarians among the semivowels, yet has this quality of a mute, that it is com-mo-diously sounded before a liquid, as fisk, fly, freckle. It has an unvariable sound, except that of is sometimes spoken nearly as ov.

G.

G has two sounds, one hard, as in ga, go, gun; the other soft, as in gem, giant. At the end of a word it is always hard, as ring, snug, song, frog.

Before e and i the sound is uncertain.

G before e is soft, as gem, generation, except in gear, geld, geese, get, gewgaw, and derivatives from words ending in g, as singing, stronger, and generally before er at the end of words, as finger.

G is mute before n, as gnash, sign, foreign.

G before i is hard as give, except in gi-ant, gigantic, gibbet, gibe, giblets, giles, gilt, gillflower, gin, ginger, gingle, to which may be added Egypt and gypsy.

Gh in the beginning of a word has the sound of the hard g, as ghostly; in the middle, and sometimes at the end, it is quite silent, as though, right, sought, spoken tho', rite, soute.

It has often at the end the sound of f, as laugh; whence laughter retains the same sound in the middle; cough, trough, sough, tough, enough, slough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gh had the force of a consonant deeply guttural, which is still continued among the Scotch.

G is used before h, l, and r.

H.

H is a note of aspiration, and shows that the following vowel must be pronounced with a strong emission of the breath, as hat, horse.

It seldom begins any but the first syllable; in which it is always sounded with a full breath, except in hair, herb, holster, honour, humble, honest, humour, and their derivatives.

It sometimes begins middle or final syllables in words compounded, as block-head; or derived from the Latin, as com-ple-chend.

J.

J consonant sounds uniformly like the soft g, and is therefore a letter useless, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jester, jocund, juice.

K.

K has the sound of hard c, and is used before e and i, where, according to English analogy, c would be soft, as kept, king, skirts, skeptick, for so it should be written, not sceptick, because cc is sounded like s, as in scene.

It is used before n, as knell, knot, but totally loses its sound in modern pronunciation.

K is never double; but c is used before it to shorten the vowel by a double consonant, as cockle, pickle.

L.

L has in the English the same liquid sound as in other languages.

The custom is to double the l at the end of monosyllables, as hill, will, full. These words were originally written hille, wille, fulle, and when the e first grew silent, and was afterwards omitted, the ll was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.

L is sometimes mute, as in elf, half, halves, calves, could, would, should, psalm, talk, salmon, falcon.

The Saxons, who delighted in guttural sounds, sometimes aspirated the l at the beginning of words, as lag a loaf, or bread; lagge, a loaf; but this pronunciation is now disused.

Le at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almost mute, as table, shuttle.

M.

M has always the same sound, as maurice, monumental.

N.

N has always the same sound, as noble, namers.

N is sometimes mute after m, as dunn, condemn, hymn.

P.

P has always the same sound, which the Welsh and Germans confound with B.

P is sometimes mute, as in psalm and between m and t, as tempt.

Ph is used for f in words derived from the Greek, as philosopher, philanthropy, philip.

Q.

Q as in other languages is always followed by u, and has a sound which our Saxon ancestors well expressed by eo, owa, as quadrant, queen, equestrian, quilt, inquire, quire, quotidian. Qu is never followed by u.

Qu is sometimes sounded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, risque, chequer.

R.

R has the same rough, snarling sound as in other tongues.

The Saxons used often to put h before it, as before l at the beginning of words.

Rh is used in words derived from the Greek, as myrrh, myrrhine, catturhous, rheum, rheumatick, rhyme.

Re, at the end of some words derived from the Latin or French, is pronounced like a weak er, as theatre, sepulchre.

S.

S has a hissing sound, as sibilation, sister.

A single s seldom ends any word, except in the third person of verbs, as loves, grows; and the plurals of nouns, as trees, bushes, distresses; the pronouns this, his, ours, yours, us; the adverb thus; and words derived from Latin, as rebus, surplus, the close being always either in o as house, horse, or in ss, as grass, dress, bliss, loss, anciently grasse, dross.

S single, at the end of words, has a grosser sound, like that of z, as trees, eyes, except this, thus, us, rebus, surplus.

It sounds like z before ion if a vowel goes before, as intrusion; and like s, if it follows a consonant, as conversion.

It sounds like z before e mute, as refuse, and before y final, as ropy; and in those words basom, desire, wisdom, prison, prisoner, present, present, damsel, casement.

It is the peculiar quality of s that it may be sounded before all consonants, except x and z in which s is comprised, x being only ks, and z, a hard or gross s. This s is therefore termed by grammarians sue potestatis litera; the reason of which the learned Dr. Clarke erroneously supposed to be, that in some words it might be doubled at pleasure. Thus we find in several languages: Σπυρι, scatter, sdegnò, sdrucchio, sfavellare, σφιξ, sgombro, sgranare, shake, slumber, smell, snipe, space, splendour, spring, squeeze, shrew, step, strength, stramen, stripes, sventura, swell.

T.

T has its customary sound, as take, temptation.

Ti before a vowel has the sound of si, as salvation, except an s goes before, as question, excepting likewise derivatives from words ending in ty, as mighty, mightier.

Th has two sounds; the one soft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The sound is soft in these words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds, and in that, these, thou, thee, thy, thine, their, they, this, those, them, though, thus; and in all words between two vowels as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen.

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is softened at the end of a word, an e silent must be added; as breath, breathe, cloth, clothe.

V.

V has a sound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From f in the Islandick alphabet, v is only distinguished by a diacritical point.

W.

Of w, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, some grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a consonant; and not rather, as it is called, a double u or ou, as water may be resolved into ouater; but letters of the same sound are always reckoned consonants in other alphabets; and it may be observed, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as frosty winter.

Wh has a sound accounted peculiar to the English which the Saxons better expressed by hw, as what, whence, whiting; in whore only, and sometimes in wholesome, wh is sounded like a simple h.

X.

X begins no English word; it has the sound of ks, as axe, extraneous.

Y.

Y, when it follows a consonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either a vowel or diphthong, it is a consonant, as ye, young. It is thought by some to be in all cases a vowel. But it may be observed of y as of w, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as rosy youth.

The chief argument by which w and y appear to be always vowels is, that the sounds which they are supposed to have as consonants, cannot be uttered after a vowel, like that of all other consonants; thus we say, tu, ut; do, odd; but in wed, dew, the two sounds of w have no resemblance to each other.

Z.

Z begins no word originally English; it has the sound as its name izzard or s hard expresses, of an s uttered with closer compression of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, froze.

In orthography I have supposed orthopy, or just utterance of words, to be included; orthography being only the art of expressing certain sounds by proper characters. I have therefore observed in what words any of the letters are mute.

Most of the writers of English grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwise than they are written, and seem not sufficiently to have considered, that of the English as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one cursory and colloquial, the other regular and solemn. The cursory pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, unskilfulness or affectation. The solemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent, is yet always less remote from the orthography, and less liable to capricious innovation. They have however generally formed their tables according to the cursory speech of those with whom they happened to converse; and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner, have often established the jargon of the lowest of the people as the model of speech.

For pronunciation the best general rule is, to consider those as the most elegant speakers, who deviate least from the written words.

There have been many schemes offered for the emendation and settlement of our orthography, which like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earliest writers in rude ages, was at first very various and uncert in, and is yet sufficiently irregular. Of these reformers some have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without considering that this is to measure by a shadow, to take that for a model or standard which is changing while they apply it. Others less absurdly indeed, but with equal unlikelihood of success, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of sounds, that every sound may have its own character, and every character a single sound. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a synod of grammarians upon principles of science. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books useless; or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confusion and perplexity of such an alteration.

Some of these schemes I shall however exhibit, which may be used according to the diversities of genius, as a guide to reformers or terror to innovators.

One of the first who proposed a scheme of regular orthography was Sir Thomas Smith, secretary of state to Queen Elizabeth, a man of real learning, and much practised in grammatical disquisitions. Had he written the following lines according to his scheme, they would have appeared thus:

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
The glory of the priesthood, and the shame,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barbarous age,
And drove those holy vandals off the stage.

At lengs Erasmus, sat grët inzurd nàm,
The glori of ze prësthüd and ðe zàm,
Stemmd se wild torrent of a barb'rous
âz
And drove zös höli Vandals öff ze stag.

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr. Gill, the celebrated master of St. Paul's school in London; which I cannot represent exactly for want of types, but will approach as nearly as I can by means of characters now in use, so as to make it understood, exhibiting two stanzas of Spenser in the reformed orthography.

Spenser, book iii. canto 5.

Unthankful wretch, said he, is this the meed,
With which her sovereign mercy thou dost quite?
Thy life she saved by her gracious deed;
But thou dost ween with villanous de-spight,

To blot her honour and her heavenly light.
Die, rather die, than so disloyally
Deem of her high desert, or seem so light.
Fair death it is to shun more shame; then die.

Die, rather die, than ever love disloyally.

But if to love disloyalty it be,
Shall I then hate her that from deathes door

Me brought? ah! far be such reproach from me.

What can I less do, than her love therefore,

Sith I her due reward cannot restore?

Die, rather die, and dying do her serve,
Dying her serve and living her adore.

Thy life she gave, thy life she doth deserve:

Die, rather die, than ever from her service swerve.

Vnthankful wræt, said hj, iz ð's zë mjð,
With wið her sovrain mersi zou dust qujt?

Dj ljf rz savæd bj har grasius djð;

But zou dost wen with vilanus dispjt.

Tu blot her honor, and her hevnlj liæt.

Dj, razar dj, zæn so disloialj.

Djm of her hik dezart, or sjm so liæt.

Fair deth it iz to run mæz rzæm; zæn dj.

Dj, razar dj, zæn ævæ luv disloialj.

But if tu luv disloialj it bj,

Sal I zæn hæz her zæt from dæzæz dæz

Mj brouht? ah! far bj suz rzpnoz from mj.

Wæt kan I les du zæn har luv zærfar,

Sih I har du ræward kanot restar?

Dj, razar dj, and djj do har særv,

Djiz har særv, and liviz har adæz.

Dj ljf rz gæz, zj lif rzj duh dezærv:

Dj, razar dj, zæn ivæz from har særviz swærv.

Dr. Gill was followed by Charles Butler, a man who did not want an understanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He seems to have been more sanguine than his predecessors, for he printed his book according to his own scheme: which the following specimen will make easily understood.

But whensoever you have occasion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to stand upon your guard, than to trust to their gentleness. For the safe-guard of your face, which they have most mind unto, provide a pershood, made of coarse bouldering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more safety is to be lined against the eminent parts with woollen cloth. First cut a piece about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other; which being sowed in his place, join unto it two short pieces of the same breadth under the eyes for the balls of the cheeks, and then set another piece about the breadth of a shilling against the top of the nose. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter bread, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may serve though it be in the heat of the day.

But pensoever you hav' occasion to trubble zeir patienc' or to coom among zem being troubled, it is better to stand upon your gard, zan to trust to zeir gentleness. For de saf'gard of your fac', Pio dey hav' most mind' unto, provid' a pursehood maad' of coarse bouldering, to bee drawn and knit about your collar, pie for mor' saity is to bee lined' against s' eminent parts wie woolen cloz. First cut a peec' about an ina and a half broad, and half a yard long, to read round by de temples and forehead, from one ear to se ozer; Pio being sowed in his plac' join unto it two fort peeces of the sam breade under se eys, for the bals of de c'ceks, and then set an ozer peec' about de breade of a shilling against the top of de nose. At ozer tim's, Pen dey ar' not angered, a little piec' half a quarter broad, to cover ze eys and parts about zem, may serve bowg it be in de heat of de day. Butler on the nature and Properties of Bees. 1634.

In the time of Charles I. there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography; as appears among other books in such editions of the works of Milton as were published by himself. Of these reformers every man had his own scheme; but they agreed in one general design of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by ejecting such as they thought superfluous. Some of them would have written these lines thus:

— All the erth

Shall then be Paradis, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier dais.

Bishop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philosophical language, proposed without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography; by which the Lord's prayer is to be written thus;

Ysr Fádher haitsh art in héven, halloed bi dhyi nam, dhyi eingdým cým, dhyi zill bi dýn in erth as it is in héven, &c.

We have since had no general reformers; but some ingenious men have endeavoured to deserve well of their country, by writing honor and labor for honour and labour, red for read in the pretertense, sais for says, repete for repeat, explane, for explain, or declame, for declaim. Of these, it may be said, that as they have done no good they have done little harm; both because they have innova ed little, and because few have followed them.

The English language, has properly no dialects; the style of writers has no professed diversity in the use of words or of their flexions and terminations, nor differs but by different degrees of skill or care. The oral diction is uniform in no spacious country, but has less variation in England than in most other nations of equal extent. The language of the northern counties retains many words now out of use, but which are commonly of the genuine Teutonick race, and is uttered with a pronunciation which now seems harsh and rough, but was probably used by our ancestors. The northern speech is therefore not barbarous but obsolete. The speech in the western provinces seems to differ from the general diction rather by a depraved pronunciation, than by any real difference which letters would express.

ETYMOLOGY.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the sense of the same word is diversified; as horse, horses; I love, I loved.

OF THE ARTICLE.

The English have two articles, an, or a, and the.

AN, A.

A has an indefinite signification, and means one, with some reference to more; as This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. He was killed by a sword, that is, some sword. This is a better book for a man than a boy, that is, for one of those that are men than one of these that are boys. An army might enter without resistance, that is, any army.

In the senses in which we use a or an in the singular, we speak in the plural without an article; as these are good books.

I have made an the original article, because it is only the Saxon an, or an, one, applied to a new use, as the German ein, and the French un; the n being cut off before a consonant in the speed of utterance.

Grammarians of the last age direct, that an should be used before h; whence it appears that the English anciently aspirated less. An is still used before the silent h, as, an herb, an honest man; but otherwise a: as, A horse, a horse, my kingdom for a horse.

Shakspeare.

An or a can only be joined with a singular, the correspondent plural in the noun without an article, as, I want a pen, I want pens: or with the pronominal adjective some as I want some pens.

THE has a particular and definite signification.

The fruit

Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world.

Milton.

That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So, He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green herbs for the use of man; that is, for those beings that are cattle, and his use that is man.

THE is used in both numbers.

I am as free as nature first made man,
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran.

Dryden.

Many words are used without articles;
as

1. Proper names, as, John, Alexander, Longinus, Aristarchus, Jerusalem, Athens, Rome, London. God is used as a proper name.

2. Abstract names, as blackness, witchcraft, virtue, vice, beauty, ugliness, love, hatred, anger, goodnature, kindness.

3. Words in which nothing but the mere being of any thing is implied: This is not beer, but water: This is not brass, but steel.

OF NOUNS SUBSTANTIVES.

The relation of English nouns to words going before or following are not expressed by cases, or changes of termination, but as in most of the other European languages by prepositions. unless we may be said to have a genitive case.

Singular.

Nom. Magister, a Master, the Master.
Gen. Magistri, of a Master, of the Master, or Masters, the Masters.

Dat. Magistro, to a Master, to the Master.
Acc. Magistrum, a Master, the Master.
Voc. Magister, Master, O Master.
Abl. Magistro, from a Master, from the Master.

Plural.

Nom. Magistri, Masters, the Masters.
Gen. Magistrorum, of Masters, of the Masters.

Dat. Magistris, to Masters, to the Masters.
Acc. Magistros, Masters, the Masters.
Voc. Magistri, Masters, O Masters.
Abl. Magistris, from Masters, from the Masters.

Our nouns are therefore only declined thus:

Master, Gen. Master's. Plur. Masters.
Scholar, Gen. Schola's. Plur. Scholars.

These genitives are always written with a mark of elision, master's, scholar's, according to an opinion long received, that the 's is a contraction of his, as the soldier's valour, for the soldier his valour: but this cannot be the true original, because 's is put to female nouns, Woman's beauty; the Virgin's delicacy; Haughty Juno's unrelenting hate; and collective nouns, as Women's passions; the rabble's insolence; the multitude's folly; in all these cases it is apparent that his cannot be understood. We say likewise the foundation's strength, the diamond's lustre, the winter's severity; but in these cases his may be understood, he and his having formerly been applied to neuters in the place now supplied by it and its.

The learned, the sagacious Wallis, to whom every English grammarian owes a tribute of reverence, calls this modification of the noun an adjective possessive; I think with no more propriety than he might have applied the same to the genitive in equum decus, Troje avis, or any other Latin genitive. Dr. Lowth on the other part, supposes the possessive pronouns mine and thine to be genitive cases.

This termination of the noun seems to constitute a real genitive indicating possession. It is derived to us from those who declined smith, a smith; Gen. smithes, of a smith; Plur. smithes, or smiths; and so in two other of their seven declensions.

It is a farther confirmation of this opinion that in the old poets both the genitive and plural, were longer by a syllable than the original word knights, for knight's, in Chaucer; leaves, for leaves, in Spenser.

When a word ends in s, the genitive may be the same with the nominative, as Venus Temple.

The plural is formed by adding s, as table, tables; fly, flies; sister, sisters: wood, woods; or es where s could not otherwise be sounded, as after ch, sh, s, z; after c sounded like s, and g like j; the mute e is vocal before s, as lance, lances; outrage, outrages.

The formation of the plural and genitive singular is the same.

A few words yet make the plural in n, as men, women, oxen, swine, and more anciently eyen and shoon. This formation is that which generally prevails in the Teutonic dialects.

Words that end in f, commonly form their plural by ves, as loaf, loaves; calf, calves.

Except a few, muff, muffs; chief, chiefs. So hoof, roofs, proof, reliefs, mischief, puff, cuff, dwarf, handkerchief, grief.

Irregular plurals are teeth, from tooth, lice, from louse, mice, from mouse, geese, from goose, feet from foot, dice from die, pence from penny, brethren from brother, children from child.

Plurals ending in s have for the most part no genitives; but we say, Womens excellencies, and Weigh the mens wits against the ladies hairs.

Dr. Wallis thinks the Lord's house may be said for the house of Lord's, but such phrases are not now in use; and surely an English ear rebels against them. They would commonly produce a troublesome ambiguity, as the Lord's house may be the house of Lords or the house of a Lord. Besides that the mark of elision is improper, for in the Lords' house nothing is cut off.

Some English substantives like those of many other languages, change their termination as they express different sexes; as prince, princess; actor, actress; lion, lioness; hero, heroine. To these mentioned by Dr. Lowth may be added arbitress, poetess, chautress, duchess, tigress, governess, tutress, peersess, authoress, traytriss, and perhaps others. Of these variable terminations we have only a sufficient number to make us feel our want, for when we say of a woman that she is a philosopher, an astronomer, a builder, a weaver, a dancer, we perceive an impropriety in the termination which we cannot avoid; but we can say that she is an architect, a botanist, a student, because these terminations have not annexed to them the notion of sex. In words which the necessities of life are often requiring, the sex is distinguished not by different terminations but by different names, as a bull, a cow, a horse, a mare; equus, equa; a cock, a hen; and sometimes by pronouns prefixed, as a he-goat, a she-goat.

Adjectives in the English language are wholly indeclinable; having neither case, gender, nor number, and being added to substantives in all relations without any change; as a good woman, good women, of a good woman, a good man, good men, of good men.

The Comparison of Adjectives.

The comparative degree of adjectives is formed by adding er, the superlative by adding est, to the positive; as fair, fairer, fairest; lovely, lovelier, loveliest; sweet, sweeter, sweetest; low, lower, lowest; high, higher, highest.

Some words are irregularly compared; as good, better, best; bad, worse, worst; little, less, least; near, nearer, next; much, more, most; many, (for more), more, (for more), most, (for most); late, later, latest, or last.

Some comparatives form a superlative by adding most, as nether, nethermost; outer, outermost; under, undermost; upper, uppermost; fore, former, foremost.

Most is sometimes added to a substantive, as topmost, southmost.

Many adjectives do not admit of comparison by terminations, and are only compared by more and most, as benevolent, more benevolent, most benevolent.

All adjectives may be compared by more and most, even when they have comparatives and superlatives regularly formed; as fair, fairer, or more fair, fairest, or most fair.

In adjectives that admit a regular comparison, the comparative more is oftener used than the superlative most, as more fair is oftener written for fairer, than most fair for fairest.

The comparison of adjectives is very uncertain; and being much regulated by commodiousness of utterance, or agreeableness of sound, is not easily reduced to rules.

Monosyllables are commonly compared.

Polysyllables or words of more than two syllables, are seldom compared otherwise than by more and most, as deplorable, more deplorable, most deplorable.

Dissyllables are seldom compared if they terminate in some, as fulsome, toilsome; in ful, as careful, spleenful, dreadful; in ing, as trifling, charming; in ous, as porous; in less, as careless, harmless; in ed, as wretched; in id, as candid; in al, as mortal; in ent, as recent, fervent; in ain, as certain; in ive, as missive; in dy, as woody; in fy, as puffy; in ky, as rocky; except lucky; in my, as roomy; in ny, as skinny; in py, as ropy, except happy; in ry, as hoary.

Some comparatives and superlatives are yet found in good writers formed without regard to the foregoing rules; but in a language subjected to so little and so lately to grammar, such anomalies must frequently occur.

So shady, is compared by Milton.

She in shadiest covert hid,

Tun'd her nocturnal note.

Parad. Lost.

And virtuous.

What she wills to say or do.

Seems wisest, virtuosest, discreetest, best.

Parad. Lost.

So trifling by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.

It is not so decorous in respect of God, that he should immediately do all the meanest and triflingest things himself, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister.

Ray on the Creation.

Famous, by Milton.

I shall be named among the famousest Of women, sung at solemn festivals.

Milton's Agonistes.

Inventive, by Ascham.

Those have the inventivest heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Mortal, by Bacon.

The mortalest poisons practised by the West Indians, have some mixture of the blood, fat, or flesh of man.

Bacon.

Natural, by Wotton.

I will now deliver a few of the properest and naturallest considerations that belong to this piece.

Wotton's Architecture.

Wretched, by Jonson.

The wretcheder are the contemners of all helps: such as presuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they understand not things.

B. Jonson.

Powerful, by Milton.

We have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight

What heaven's great king hath pow'r-fullest to send.

Against us from about his throne.

Par. Lost.

The termination in ish may be accounted in some sort a degree of comparison, by which the signification is diminished below the positive, as black, blackish, or tending to blackness; salt, saltish, or having a little taste of salt: they therefore admit no comparison. This termination is seldom added but to words expressing sensible qualities, nor often to words of above one syllable, and is scarcely used in the solemn or sublime style.

OF PRONOUNS.

Pronouns, in the English language, are, I, thou, he, with to their plurals, we, ye, they; it, who, which, what, whether, whosoever, whatsoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, yow, yours, his, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that, other, another, the same, some.

The pronouns personal are irregularly inflected.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	I	We
Accus. and other oblique cases.	Me	Us
Nom.	Thou	Ye
Oblique.	Thee	You

You is commonly used in modern writers for ye, particularly in the language of ceremony, where the second person plural is used for the second person singular, You are my friend.

Singular. Plural.

Nom.	He	They	} Applied to masculines.
Oblique.	Him	Them
Nom.	She	They	} Applied to femines.
Oblique.	Her	Them
Nom.	It	They	} Applied to neuters or things.
Oblique.	Its	Them

For it the practice of ancient writers was to use he, and for its, his.

The possessive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without cases or change of termination.

The possessive of the first person is my, mine, our, ours; of the second, thy, thine, your, yours; of the third, from he, his, from she, her, and hers, and in the plural, their, theirs, for both sexes.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, are used when the substantives preceding is separated by a verb, as, These are our books. These books are ours. Your children excel ours in stature, but ours surpass yours in learning.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, notwithstanding their seeming plural termination, are applied equally to singular and plural substantives, as This book is ours. These books are ours.

Mine and thine were formerly used before a vowel, as mine amiable lady; which though now disused in prose, might be still properly continued in poetry; they are used as ours, and yours, when they are referred to a substantive preceding, as, thy house is larger than mine, but my garden is more spacious than thine.

Their and theirs, are the possessives likewise of they, when they is the plural of it, and are therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are, who, which, what, whenever, whosoever, whatsoever.

Who is now used in relation to persons, and which in relation to things; but they were anciently confounded. At least it was common to say, the man which, though I remember no example of the thing who.

Whose is rather the poetical than regular genitive of which.

The fruit
Of that forbid-den tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world. Milton.

Whether is only used in the nominative, and accusative cases; and has no plural, being applied only to one of a number, commonly to one of two, as Whether of these is left I know not, Whether shall I choose? It is now almost obsolete.

What, whether relative or interrogative, is, without variation.

Whosoever, whatsoever, being compounded of who or what, and soever, follow the rule of their primitives.

In all Cases	}	Singular	Plural.
		That	These
		That	Those
		Other	Others
		Whether

The plural others is not used but when it is preferred to a substantive preceding, as I have sent other horses. I have not sent the same horses but others.

Another, being only an other, has no plural.

Here, there, and where, joined with certain particles, have a relative and pronominal use. Hereof, hencein, hereby, here- after, herewith, thereof, therein, thereby, thereupon, therewith, whereof, wherein, whereby, whereupon, wherewith, which signify, of this, in this, &c. of that, in that, &c. of which, in which, &c.

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly there for and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in use. The rest seem to be passing by degrees into neglect, though proper, useful, and analogous. They are referred both to singular and plural antecedents.

There are two more words used only in conjunction with pronouns, own and self.

Own is added to possessives, both singular and plural, as my own hand, our own house. It is emphatical, and implies a silent contrariety or opposition; as, I live in my own house, that is, not in a hired house. This I did with my own hand, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to possessives, as myself, yourselves; and sometimes to personal pronouns, as himself, itself, themselves. It then, like own, expresses emphasis and opposition, as I did this myself, that is, not another; or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as We hurt ourselves by vain rage.

Himself, itself, themselves, are supposed by Wallis to be put by corruption, for his self, it self, their selves; so that self, is always a substantive. This seems justly observed, for we say, He came himself; Himself shall do this; where himself cannot be an accusative.

OF THE VERB.

English verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as, I languish. The neuters are formed like the actives.

Most verbs signifying action may likewise signify condition or habit, and become neuters, as I love, I am in love; I strike, I am now striking.

Verbs have only two tenses inflected in their terminations, the present, and the simple preterite; the other tenses are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, shall, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The passive voice is formed by joining the participle preterite to the substantive verb, as I am loved.

To have. Indicative Mood.
Present Tense.

Sing. I have, thou hast, he hath or has;
Plur. We have, ye have, they have.

Has is a termination corrupted from hath, but now more frequently used both in verse and prose.

Simple Preterite.

Sing. I had, thou hadst, he had;
Plur. We had, ye had, they had.

Compound Preterite.

Sing. I have had, thou hast had, he has or hath had;
Plur. We have had, ye have had, they have had.

Preterpluperfect.

Sing. I had had, thou hadst had, he had had;
Plur. We had had, ye had had, they had had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have, thou shalt have, he shall have;
Plur. We shall have, ye shall have, they shall have.

Second future.

Sing. I will have, thou wilt have, he will have;
Plur. We will have, ye will have, they will have.

By reading these future tenses may be observed the variations of shall and will.

Imperative Mood.

Sing. Have or have thou, let him have;
Plur. Let us have, have or have ye, let them have.

Conjunctive Mood.Present.

Sing. I have, thou have, he have;
Plur. We have, ye have, they have.

Preterite simple as in the Indicative.

Preterite compound.

Sing. I have had, thou have had, he have had;
Plur. We have had, ye have had, they have had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have, as in the Indicative.

Second Future.

Sing. I shall have had, thou shalt have had, he shall have had.
Plur. We shall have had, ye shall have had, they shall have had Potential.

The potential form of speaking is expressed by may, can, in the present: and might, could, or should, in the preterite, joined with the infinitive mood of the verb.

Present.

Sing. I may have, thou mayest have, he may have.
Plur. We may have, ye may have, they may have.

Preterite.

Sing. I might have, thou mightest have, he might have;
Plur. We might have, ye might have, they might have.

Present.

Sing. I can have, thou canst have, he can have;
Plur. We can have, ye can have, they can have.

Preterite.

Sing. I could have, thou couldst have, he could have;
Plur. We could have, ye could have, they could have.

In like manner should is united to the verb.

There is likewise a double Preterite.

Sing. I should have had, thou shouldst have had, he should have had;
Plur. We should have had, ye should have had, they should have had.

In like manner we use, I might have had; I could have had, &c.

Infinitive Mood.

Present. To have.
Preterite. To have had.
Participle present. Having.
Participle preterite. Had.

Verb active. To love.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I love, thou lovest, he loveth or loves;
Plur. We love, ye love, they love.

Preterite simple.

Sing. I loved, thou lovedst, he loved;
Plur. We loved, ye loved, they loved.
Preterperfect compound. I have loved, &c.

Preterpluperfect. I had loved, &c.

Future. I shall love, &c. I will love, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Love or love thou, let him love;

Plur. Let us love, love or love ye, let them love.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I love, thou love, he love;

Plur. We love, ye love, they love.

Preterite simple, as in the Indicative.

Preterite compound. I have loved, &c.

Future. I shall love, &c.

Second Future. I shall have loved, &c.

Potential.

Present. I may or can love, &c.

Preterite. I might, could, or should love, &c.

Double Pret. I might, could, or should have loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To love.

Preterite. To have loved.

Participle present. Loving.

Participle past. Loved.

The passive is formed by the addition of the participle preterite, to the different tenses of the verb to be, which must therefore be here exhibited.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I am, thou art, he is;

Plur. We are or be, ye are or be, they are or be.

The plural be is now in little use.

Preterite.

Sing. I was, thou wast or wert, he was;

Plur. We were, ye were, they were.

Wert is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not to be used in the indicative.

Preterite compound. I have been, &c.

Preterpluperfect. I had been, &c.

Future. I shall or will be, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Be thou: let him be;

Plur. Let us be; be ye; let them be.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I be, thou beest, he be;

Plur. We be, ye be, they be.

Preterite.

Sing. I were, thou wert, he were;

Plur. We were, ye were, they were.

Preterite compound. I have been, &c.

Future. I shall have been, &c.

Potential.

I may or can; would, could, or should be; could, would, or should have been, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be.

Preterite. To have been.

Participle present. Being.

Participle preterite. Having been.

Passive voice. Indicative mood.

I am loved, &c. I was loved, &c. I have been loved, &c.

Conjunctive Mood.

If I be loved, &c. If I were loved, &c.

If I shall have been loved, &c.

Potential Mood.

I may or can be loved, &c. I might, could, or should be loved, &c. I might, could, or should have been loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be loved.

Preterite. To have been loved.

Participle. Loved.

There is another form of English verbs in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflexions, which are therefore to be learned in this place.

To do.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I do, thou dost, he doth;

Plur. We do, ye do, they do.

Preterite.

Sing. I did, thou didst, he did;

Plur. We did, ye did, they did.

Preterite, &c. I have done, &c. I had done, &c.

Future. I shall or will do, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Do thou, let him do;

Plur. Let us do, do ye, let them do;

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I do, thou do, he do.

Plur. We do, ye do, they do.

The rest are as in the Indicative.

Infinitive. To do; to have done.

Participle present. Doing.

Participle preter. Done.

Do is sometimes used superfluously, as, I do love, I did love; simply for I love, or I loved; but this is considered as a vitious mode of speech.

It is sometimes used emphatically; as, I do love thee, and when I love thee not, Chaos is come again. Shaksp.

It is frequently joined with a negative; as, I like her, but I do not love her; I wished him success, but did not help him. This, by custom at least, appears more easy than the other form of expressing the same sense by a negative adverb after the verb, I like her, but love her not.

The imperative prohibitory is seldom applied in the second person, at least in prose, without the word do; as, Stop him, but do not hurt him; Praise beauty, but do not dote on it.

Its chief use is in interrogative forms of speech, in which it is used through all the persons; as, do I live? Dost thou strike me? Do they rebel? Did I complain? Didst thou love her? Did she die? So likewise in negative interrogations; Do I not yet grieve? Did she not die.

Do and did are thus used only for the present and simple preterite.

There is another manner of conjugating neuter verbs, which, when it is used, may not improperly denominate them neuter passives, as they are inflected according to the passive form by the help of the verb substantive to be. They answer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French; as,

I am risen, surrexi, Latin; Je me suis levé, French.

I was walked out, exieram; Je m'etois promené.

In like manner we commonly express the present tense; as, I am going, eo. I am grieving, doleo. She is dying, illa moritur.

The tempest is raging, furit procella. I am pursuing an enemy, hostem insequor. So the other tenses, as, We were walking, εὐχχασαμεν περιπατῶντες. I have been walking, I had been walking, I shall or will be walking.

There is another manner of using the active participle, which gives it a passive signification: as, The grammar is now printing, grammatica jam nunc chartis imprimitur. The brass is forging, era ex-cuduntur. This is, in my opinion, a vitious expression, probably corrupted from a phrase more pure, but now somewhat obsolete: The book is a printing. The brass is a forging; a being properly at, and printing and forging verbal nouns signifying action, according to the analogy of this language.

The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers frequently confounded, or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected, when some convenience of versification does not invite its revival. It is used among the purer writers of former times after if, though, ere, before, till, or until, whether, except, unless, whatsoever, whomsoever, and words of wishing; as, Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not.

OF IRREGULAR VERBS.

The English verbs were divided by Ben Jonson into four conjugations, without any reason arising from the nature of the language, which has properly but one conjugation, such as has been exemplified; from which all deviations are to be considered as anomalies, which are indeed, in our monosyllables, Saxon verbs, and the verbs derived from them, very frequent: but almost all the verbs which have been adopted from other languages follow the regular form.

Our verbs are observed by Dr. Wallis to be irregular only in the formation of the preterite, and its participle. Indeed, in the scantiness of our conjugations there is scarcely any other place for irregularity.

The first irregularity, is a slight deviation from the regular form, by rapid utterance or poetical contraction; the last syllable ed is often joined with the former by suppression of e; as lov'd for loved; after c, ch, sh, f, k, x, and after the consonants s, th, when more strongly pronounced, and sometimes after m, n, r, if preceded by a short vowel, t is used in pronunciation, but very seldom in writing, rather than d; as plac't, snatch't, fish't, wak't, dwell't, smell't; for plac'd, snatch'd, fish'd, wak'd, dwell'd, smell'd.

Those words which terminate in l, or ll, or p, make their preterite in t, even in solemn language; as crept, felt, dwelt; sometimes after x, ed is changed into t; as vert: this is not constant.

A long vowel is often changed into a short one; thus kept, slept, wept, crept, swept; from the verbs, to keep, to sleep, to weep, to creep, to sweep.

Where d or t go before, the additional letter d or t in this contracted form coalesce into one letter with the radical d or t: if t were the radical, they coalesce into t; but if d were the radical, then into dt, or t, as the one or the other letter may be more easily pronounced; as, read, led, spread, shed, shved, bid, hid, chid, fed, bled, bred, sped, strid, slid, rid, from the verbs to read, to lead, to spread, to shed, to shved, to hide, to chide, to feed, to bleed, to breed, to speed, to stride, to slide, to ride. And thus, cast, hurt, cost, burst, eat, heat, sweat, sit, quit, smit, writ, bit, hit, met, shot; from the verbs, to cast, to hurt, to cost, to burst, to eat, to heat, to sweat, to sit, to quit, to smite, to write, to bite, to hit, to meet, to shoot. And in like manner, lent, sent, rent, girt; from the verbs, to lend, to send, to rend, to gird.

The participle preterite or passive is often formed in en instead of ed; as, been, taken, given, slain, known, from the verbs, to be, to take, to give, to slay, to know.

Many words have two or more participles, as not only written, bitten, eaten, beuten, hidden, chidden, shotten, chosen, broken; but likewise writ, bit, eat, beat, hid, chid, shot, chose, broke, are promiscuously used in the participle, from the verbs to write, to bite, to eat, to beat, to hide, to chide, to shoot, to choose, to break, and many such like.

In the same manner sown, shown, heron, mown, loaden, luden, as well as sow'd, show'd, her'd, mow'd, loaden, laded, from the verbs to sow, to show, to her, to mow, to load or lade.

Concerning these double participles it is difficult to give any rule; but he shall seldom err who remembers, that when a verb has a participle distinct from its preterite, as write, wrote, written, that distinct participle is more proper and elegant, as The book is written, is better than The book is wrote. Wrote however may be used in poetry; at least if we allow any authority to poets, who, in the exultation of genius, think themselves perhaps intitled to trample on grammarians. There are other anomalies in the preterite.

1. Win, spin, begin, swim, strike, stiel, sing, sting, fang, ring, wring, spring, swing, drunk, sunk, shrink, stink, come, run, find, bind, grind, wind, both in the preterite, imperfect, and participle passive, give won, spun, began, swam, struck, stuck, sung, stung, fang, rang, wrung, sprung, swung, drunk, sunk, shrunk, stunk, come, run, found, bound, ground, wound. And most of them are also formed in the preterite by a, as began, ran, sang, sprang, drank, came, ran, and some others; but most of these are now obsolete. Some in the participle passive likewise take en, as stricken, stricken, drunken, bounden.

2. Fight, teach, reach, seek, beseech, catch, buy, bring, think, work, make fought, taught, raught, sought, besought, caught, bought, brought, thought, wrought.

But a great many of these retain likewise the regular form, as teached, reached, beseeched, catched, worked.

3. Take, shake, forsake, wake, awake, stand, break, speak, bear, shear, swear, tear, wear, weave, cleave, strive, thrive, drive, shine, rise, arise, smite, write, bide, abide, ride, choose, chuse, tread, get, beget, forget, seethe, make in both preterite and participle took, shook, forsook, woke, awoke, stood, broke, spoke, bore, shov, swore, bore, wore, wore, clove, strove, throve, drove, shone, rose, arose, smote, wrote, bode, abode, rode, chose, trode, got, begot, forgot, sod. But we say likewise, thrive, rise, smit, writ, abid, rid. In the preterite some are likewise formed by a, as brake, spake, bare, share, sware, tare, ware, clare, gat, begat, forgat, and perhaps some others, but more rarely. In the participle passive are many of them formed by en, as taken, shaken, forsaken, broken, spoken, born, shorn, sworn, torn, worn, woven, cloven, thriven, driven, risen, smitten, ridden, chosen, trodden, gotten, begotten, forgotten, sodden. And many do likewise retain the analogy in both, as waked, awaked, sheared, weaved, leaved, abided, seethed.

4. Give, bid, sit, make in the preterite, gave, bade, sate; in the participle passive, given, bidden, sitten; but in both bid.

5. Draw, know, grow, throw, blow, crow like a cock, fly, slay, see, ly, make their preterite drew, knew, grew, threw, blew, crew, flew, slew, saw, lay; their participles passive by n, drawn, known, grown, thrown, blown, flown, slain, seen, lien, lain. Yet from see is made sted: from go, went, from the old wend, the participle is goue

OF DERIVATION.

That the English language may be more easily understood, it is necessary to inquire how its derivative words are deduced from their primitives, and how the primitives are borrowed from other languages. In this inquiry I shall sometimes copy Dr. Hallis, and sometimes endeavour to supply his defects, and rectify his errors.

Nouns are derived from verbs.

The thing implied in the verb as done or produced is commonly either the present of the verb, as to love, love, to fright, a fright; to fight, a fight; or the preterite of the verb, as to strike, I struck or strook, a stroke.

The action is the same with the participle present, as loving, frightening, fighting, striking.

The agent, or person acting, is denoted by the syllable er added to the verb, as lover, frighter, striker.

Substantives, adjectives, and sometimes other parts of speech, are changed into verbs; in which case the vowel is often lengthened, or the consonant softened: as, a house, to house; brass, to braze; glass, to glaze; grass, to graze; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a fish, to fish; oyl, to oyl; further, to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to hinder.

Sometimes the termination en is added, especially to adjectives; as, haste, to hasten; length, to lengthen; strength, to strengthen; short, to shorten; fast, to fasten; white, to whiten; black, to blacken; hard, to harden; soft, to soften.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y; as a louse, lousy; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy; might, mighty; worth, worthy; wit, witty; lust, lusty; water, watery; earth, earthy; wood, a wood, woody; air, airy; a heart, heartly; a hand, handy.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as, joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youthful; care, careful; use, useful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

Sometimes, in almost the same sense, but with some kind of diminution thereof, the termination some is added, denoting something, or in some degree; as delight, delightsome; game, gamesome; irk, irksome; burden, burdensome; trouble, troublesome; light, lightsome; hand, handsome; alone, lonesome; toil, toilsome.

On the contrary, the termination less added to substantives, makes adjectives signifying want; as worthless, witless, heartless, joyless, careless, helpless. Thus comfort, comfortless; sap, sapless.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the participle un prefixed to many adjectives, or in before words derived from the Latin; as, pleasant, unpleasant; wise, unwise; profitable, unprofitable; patient, impatient. Thus unworthy, unhealthy, unfruitful, unuseful, and many more.

The original English primitive is un; but as we often borrow from the Latin, or its descendants, words already signifying privation, as inefficacious, impious, indiscreet, the inseparable particles un and in have fallen into confusion, from which it is not easy to disentangle them.

Un is prefixed to all words originally English, as untrue, untruth, untaught, unhandsome.

Un is prefixed to all participles made privative adjectives, as unfeeling, unassisting, unaided, undelighted, unendured.

Un ought never to be prefixed to a participle present to mark a forbearance of action, as un sighing, but a privation of habit, as un pitying.

Un is prefixed to most substantives which have an English termination, as unfertility, unperfectness, which, if they have borrowed terminations, take in, or im, as unfertility, imperfection; uncivil, incivility; inactive, inactivity.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is usual to retain the participle prefixed, as indecent, inelegant, improper; but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative participle, we commonly prefix un, as unpolite, ungallant.

The prepositive particles dis and mis, derived from the des and mes of the French, signify almost the same as un; yet dis rather imports contrariety than privation, since it answers to the Latin preposition de. Mis insinuates some error, and for the most part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, to dislike; honour, dishonour; to honour, to grace, to dishonour; to disgrace; to deign, to disdain; chance, hap, mischance, mishap; to take, to mistake; deed, misdeed; to use, to misuse; to employ, to misemploy; to apply, to misapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the same signification; as distinguish, distinguo detract, detract; defame, defamo; detain, detineo.

The termination ly added to substantives, and sometimes to adjectives, forms adjectives that import some kind of similitude or agreement; being formed by contraction of lick or like.

A giant, giantly, giantlike; earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The same termination ly, added to adjectives, forms adverbs of like signification; as, beautiful, beautifully; sweet, sweetly; that is, in a beautiful manner; with some degree of sweetness.

The termination ish, added to adjectives, imports diminution; and added to substantives, imports similitude or tendency to a character; as, green, greenish; white, whitish; soft, softish; a thief, thiefish; a wolf, wolfish; a child, childish.

We have forms of diminutives in substantives, though not frequent; as, a hill, a hillcock; a cock, a cockrel; a pike, a pickrel; this is a French termination; a goose, a gosling; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a chicken; a man, a manakin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Haikin, whence the patronymick Hawkins, Wilkin, Thomkin, and others.

Yet still there is another form of diminution among the English, by lessening the sound itself, especially of vowels, as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or lengthening it; and that sometimes not so much by change of the letters, as of their pronunciation; as, sup, sip, soop, sop, sippet, where, besides the extension of the vowel, there is added the French termination et; top, tip; spit, spout; babe, baby, booby, foetus; great pronounced long, especially if with a stronger sound, great, little pronounced long lee-tle; ting, tang, tong, imports a succession of smaller and then greater sounds; and so in jingle, jangle, tingle, tangie, and many other made words.

Much however of this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending wholly on oral utterance, and therefore scarcely worthy the notice of Writers.

Of concrete adjectives are made abstract substantives, by adding the termination ness; and a few in hood or head, noting character or qualities; as, white, whiteness; hard, hardness; great, greatness; skilful, skilfulness, unskilfulness; godhead, manhood, maidenhood, widowhood, knighthood, priesthood, likelihood, falsehood.

There are other abstracts, partly derived from adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination th, a small change being sometimes made; as, long, length; strong, strength; broad, breadth; wide, width; deep, depth; true, truth; warm, warmth; dear, dearth; slew, slowness; mercy, merch; heal, health; well, wealth; dry, drought; young, youth; and so moon, month.

Like these are some words derived from verbs; die, death; till, tith; grow, growth; mow, later moweth, after noweth; commonly spoken and written after math, after moth; steal, stealth; bear, birth; cue, ruth; and probably earth from ear or plow; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, drought.

These should rather be written fighth, frighth, only that custom will not suffer h to be twice repeated.

The same form retain faith, spight, wreath, wreath, broth, froth, breath, sooth, worth, light, wight, and the like, whose primitives are either entirely obsolete, or seldom occur. Perhaps they are derived from sey or foy, spry, wry, wreak, brew, mow, fry, bray, say, work.

Some ending in ship imply an office, employment, or condition; as, kingship, wardship, guardianship, partnership, stewardship, headship, lordship.

Thus worship, that is, worthship, whence worshipful, and to worship.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do especially denote dominion, at least state or condition; as kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, popedom, christendom, freedom, wisdom, whoredom, bishoprick, baillwick.

Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the same import with us as among them, scarcely ever occurring, except in words derived from the French, as commandment, usage.

There are in English often long trains of words allied by the meaning and derivation: as, to beat, a bat, a battoon, a battle, a beetle, a battle-door, to batter, batter, a kind of glutinous composition for food, made by beating different bodies into one mass. All these are of similar signification, and perhaps derived from the Latin batuo. Thus take, touch, tickle, tack, tackle, all imply a local conjunction from the Latin tango, tetigi, tactum.

From two are formed twain, twices, twenty, twelve, twins, twine, twist, twirl, twig, twitch, twinge, between, betwixt, twilight, twibil.

The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more subtlety than solidity, and such as perhaps might in every language be enlarged without end.

Sn usually imply the nose, and what relates to it. From the Latin nasus are derived the French nes and the English nose; and nesse, a promontory, as projecting like a nose. But as if from the consonants ns taken from nasus, and transposed, that they may the better correspond, sn denotes nasus; and thence are derived many words that relate to the nose, as snout, sneeze snore, snort, sneer, snicker, snarl, snivel, snite, snuff, snuffle, snuffle, snarl, snudge.

There is another sn, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin simus, as sneak, sneak, snail, snare; so likewise snag and snatch, snib, snub.

B imply a blast; as, blow, blast, to blast, to blight, and metaphorically, to blast one's reputation; bleat, bleak, a bleak place, to look bleak, or weather beaten, bleak, blay, bleach, bluster, blurt, blister, blab, bladder, bleb, blubber-lip't, blubber-cheek'd, bloted, blote herrings, blast, blaze, to blow, that is, blossom, bloom; and perhaps blood and blush.

In the native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the letters and the thing signified; and therefore the sounds of letters smaller, sharper, louder, closer, softer, stronger, clearer, more obscure, and more stridulous, do very often intimate the like effects in the things signified.

Thus words that begin with str intimate the force and effect of the thing signified, as if probably derived from strenuus, or strenuus, as strong, strength, strew, strike, streak, stroke, stripe, strive, strife, struggle, strout, strut, stretch, strait, strict, straight, that is, narrow, distrain, stress, distress, string, strap, stream, streamer, strand, strip, stray, struggle, strange, stride, straddle.

St in like manner imply strength, but in a less degree, so much only as is sufficient to preserve what has been already communicated, rather than acquire any new degree; as if it were derived from the Latin sto: for example, stand, stay, that is, to remain, or to prop; staff, stay, that is, to oppose; stop, to stuff, stifle, to stay; that is, to stop; a stay, that is, an obstacle; stick, stut, stuter, stummer, stagger, stickle, stick, stake, a sharp pale, and any thing deposited at play; stock, stem, sting, to sting, stink, stitch, stud, stanchion, stub, stubble, to stub up, stump, whence stumble, stalk, to stalk, step, to stamp, with the feet, whence to stamp, that is to make an impression and a stamp; stow, to stow, to bestow, steward, or stoward, stead, steady, steadfast, stable, a stable, a stall, to stall, stool, still, stallage, stage, still, adjective, and still, adv. stale, stout, sturdy, steud, stout, stallion, stiff, stark-dead, to starve with hunger or cold; stone, steel, stern, staunch, to staunch blood, to stare, steep, steeple, stair, standard, a stated measure, stately. In all these, and perhaps some others, st denote something firm and fixed.

Thr imply a more violent degree of motion; as throw, thrust, throng, throbb, through, threat, threaten, thrall, throws.

Wr imply some sort of obliquity or distortion, as, wry, to wreath, wrest, wrestle, wring, wrong, winch, wrench, wrangle, wrinkle, wrath, wreak, wrack, wretch, wrist, wrap.

Sw imply a silent agitation, or a softer kind of lateral motion; as, sway, swag, to sway, swagger, swerte, sweat, sweep, swell, swim, swing, swift, sweet, switch, swinge.

Nor is there much difference of sm in smooth, swag, snail, smick, smite, which signifies the same as to strike, but is a softer word; small, smell, smack, smother, smart, a smart blow properly signifies such a kind of stroke, as, with an originally silent motion implied in sm, proceeds to a quick violence, denoted by ar: suddenly ended, as is shewn by t.

Cl denote a kind of adhesion or tenacity, as in cleave, clay, cling, climb, clamber, clammy, clasp, to clip, to clinch, cloak, clog, close, to close, a clod, a clot, a clot of blood, clouted cream, a cluster, a cluster.

Sp imply a kind of dissipation or expansion, especially a quick one, particularly if there be an r, as if it were from spargo or separo: for example, spread, spring, sprig, sprout, sprinkle, split, splinter, spill, spit, sputter, spatter.

Sl denote a kind of silent fall, or a less observable motion; as in slime, slide, slip, slipper, sly, sleight, slit, slow, slack, slight, sling, slap.

And so likewise ash, in crash, rash, gash, flush, clash, lush, slash, plash, trash, indicate something acting more nimbly and sharply. But ush, in crush, rush, gush, flush, blush, brush, hush, push, imply something as acting more obtusely and dully. Yet in both there is indicated a swift and sudden motion, not instantaneous, but gradual, by the continued sound sh.

Thus in fling, sling, ding, swing, cling, sing, wring, sting, the tingling of the termination ng, and the sharpness of the vowel i, imply the continuation of a very slender motion or tremour, at length indeed vanishing, but not suddenly interrupted. But in tink, wink, sink, c'ink, chink, think, that end in a mute consonant, there is also indicated a sudden ending.

If there be an l, as in jingle, tingle, tinkle, mingle, sprinkle, twinkle, there is applied a frequency, or iteration of small acts. And the same frequency of acts, but less subtle by reason of the clearer vowel a, is indicated in jangle, tangle, spangle, mangle, wrangle, brangle, dangle; as also in mumble, grumble, jumble, tumble, stumble; rumble; crumble; fumble. But at the same time the close u implies something obscure or obtunded; and a congeries of consonants mb, denotes a confused kind of rolling or tumbling, as in ramble, scramble, scramble ramble, amble; but in these there is something acute.

In nimble, the acuteness of the vowel denotes celerity. In sparkle, sp denotes dissipation, or an acute crackling, k a sudden interruption, l a frequent iteration; and in like manner in sprinkle, unless in may imply the subtilty of the dissipated guttules. Thick and thin differ, in that the former ends with an obtuse consonant, and the latter with an acute.

In like manner, in squeek, squeak, squeal, squall, brack, wrant, paul, spaul, screek, shriek, shrill, sharp, shrivel, wrinkle, crack, crash, clash, gnash, plash, crush, lush, hisse, fesse, whist, soft, jar, hurl, curl, whirl, butz, bustle, spinile, dwindle, twine, twist, and in many more, we may observe the agreement of such sort of sounds with the things signified; and this so frequently happens, that scarce any language which I know can be compared with our's. So that one monosyllable word, of which kind are almost all ours, emphatically expresses what in other languages can scarce be explained but by compounds, or compounds, or sometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin, but the greatest part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as, grace, face, elegant, elegance, resemble.

Some verbs which seem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the present tense, and some from the supines.

From the present are formed, spend, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco; despise, dispicio; approve, approbo; conceive, concipio.

From the supines, supplicate, supplico; demonstrate, demonstro; dispose, dispono; expiate, expatio; suppress, supprimo; eximio, exino.

Nothing is more apparent, than that Wallis goes too far in quest of originals. Many of these, which seem selected as immediate descendants from the Latin, are apparently French, as conceive, approve, expose, exempt.

- Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transferred into our language; as, garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, plead, from the French, jar din, jartier, bouclier, avancer, crier, plaider; though, indeed, even of these part is of Latin original.

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans, it is doubtful whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the Latins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from some common original; as, wine, vinum; wind, ventus; went, veni; way, via; wail, vallum; wallow, volvo; wool, vellus; will, volo; worm, vermis; worth, virtus; wasp, vespa; day, dies; drate, traho; tame, domo, δαμνω; yoke, jugum, ζωγω; over, upper, super, υπερ; am, sum, εμι; break, frango; fly, volo; blow, flo. I make no doubt but the Teutonick is more ancient than the Latin; and it is no less certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great number of words not only from the Greek, especially the Æolick, but from other neighbouring languages, as the Oscan and others, which have long become obsolete, received not a few from the Teutonick. It is certain that the English, German, and other Teutonick languages, retained some derived from the Greek, which the Latin has not; as ax, uchs, mit, furd, pfurd, daughter, tochter, mickle, mingle, moon, sear, grave, graff, to grave, to scrape, whole, from αξιων, μετα, σαρβωμοσ. Σουγατηρ, μεγαλοσ, μεγνυα, μνησ, ξηροσ, γραβα, ιλοσ. Since they received these immediately from the Greeks, without the intervention of the Latin language, why may not other words be derived immediately from the same fountain, though they be likewise found among the Latins?

Our ancestors were studious to form borrowed words, however long, into monosyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the first syllable, especially in words beginning with a vowel; and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewise consonants of a weaker sound, retaining the stronger, which seem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the same organ, in order that the sound might become the softer; but especially transposing their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example, in expendo, spend; exemplum, sample; excipio, scape; extraneus, strange; extractum, stretch'd; exercucio, to screw; exscorio, to scour; excorio, to scourge; excortico, to scratch; and others beginning with ex: as also, emendo, to mend; episcopus, bishop; in Danish, bisp; epistola, epistle; hospitale, spittle; Hispania, Spain; historia, story.

Many of these etymologies are doubtful, and some evidently mistaken.

The following are somewhat harder, Alexander, Sauder, Elisabetha, Betty, apis, bee; aper, bar; p passing into b, as in bishop, and by cutting off a from the beginning, which is restored in the middle;

but for the old bar or bare, we now say hoar; as for lung, long; for bain, bane; for stane, stone, apugna, brason, p being changed into b, and a transposed, as in aper, and g changed into w, as in pignus, paran; lege, law; ασπις, fox, cutting off the beginning and changing p into f; as in pellis, a fell; pullus, a foal; pater, father; pavor, fear; polio, file; pleo, impleo, fill, full; piscis, fish; and transposing o into the middle, which was taken from the beginning; apex, a piece; peak, pke; zophorus, freeze; mustum, stun; defensio, fence; dispensator, spencer; asculto, escouter, Fr. scout; exscalpo, scrape, restoring l instead of r; and hence scrap, scrable, scrawl; exculpo, scoop; exterritus, start; extonitus, attonit, ston'd; stomachus, marv; offendo, fin'd; obstipo, stop; audere, dare; cavere, ware, whence, a-ware, be-ware, wary, warn, warning; for the Latin v consonant was formerly sounded like our w, and the modern sound of the v consonant was formerly that of the letter f, that is, the Æolic digamma, which had the sound of φ, and the modern sound of the letter f was that of the Greek φ or phi; ulcus, ulcere, ulcer, sore; and hence, sorry, sorrow, sorrowful; ingenium, engine, gin; scalenus, leaning, unless you would rather derive it from κλίμα, whence inclino; infundibulum, funnel; gagates, jett; projectum, to jett forth, a jetty; culcius, a cow.

There are syncopes somewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina, dame; as the French homme, femme, nom, from homine, fœmina, nomine. Thus pagina, page; ποτήριον, pot; κώληρα, cup; cantharus, can; tentorium, tent; precor, pray; præda, prey; specio, specular, spy; plico, ply; implico, imply; replico, reply; complico, comply; sedes episcopalis, see.

A vowel is also cut off in the middle, that the number of the syllables may be lessened; as amita, aunt; spiritus, spright; debitum, debt; dubito, doubt; comes, comitis, count; clericus, clerk; quietus, quit, quite; acquieto, to acquit; separo, to spare; stabilis, stable; stabulum, stable; pallacium, palace, place; rabula, raal, ravel, roual, brawl, ruble, brable; quæsitio, quest.

As also a consonant, or at least one of a softer sound, or even a whole syllable, rotundus, round; fragilis, frail; securus, sure; regula, rule; tegula, tile; subtilis, subtle; nomen, noun; decanus, dean, computo, count; subitaneus, sudden, soon; supercare, to soar; periculum, peril; mirabile, marvel; as magnus, main; dignor, deign; tingo, stain; unctum, taint; pingo, paint; prædari, reach.

The contractions may seem harder, where many of them meet, as κίρκος, kyrk, church, presbyter, priest; sacristanus, sexton; frango, fregi, break, breach; fagus, ivy, beech, f changed into b, and g into ch, which are letters near a kin; frigesco, freeze, frigesco, fresh, sc into sh, as above in bishop, fish, so in scapha, skiff, skip, and refrigesco, r.fresh; but viresco, fresh; phlebotomus, steam; bovina, beef; vitulina, veal; scutifer, squire; pœnitentia, penance; sanctuarium, sanctuary, sentry; quæsitio, chase; perquisitio, purchase; anguilla, eel; insula, isle, île, island, iland; insuletta, islet, isle, eyght, and more contractedly ey, whence Owsey, Ruley, Eley; examinare, to scan; namely, by rejecting from the beginning and end e and o, according to the usual manner, the remainder xamin, which the Saxons, who did not use x, write examen, or scamen, is contracted into scan; as from dominus, don; nomine, noun; abomino, ban; and indeed apum examen they turned into sciame; for which we say swarme, by inserting r, to denote the murmuring; the saurus, store; sedile, sool; læris, wel; sudo, sweat; gaudium, gay; jocus, joy; succus, juice; catena, chain; caliga, calga, chause, chause, Fr. hose; extinguo, stanch, squench, quench, shint; foras, forth; species, spice; recito, read; adjuvo, aid; ævo, ævum, ay, age, ever; foccus, lock; excerpo, scrape, scrable, scrawl; extravagus, stray, straggle; collectum, clot, clutch; colligo, coil; recoiling, recoil; severo, swear; stridulus, shrill; procurator, proxy; pulso, to push; calanus, a quill; impetere, to impeach; augeo, auxi, wauc; and vanesco, vanui, wane; syllabare, to spell; puteus, pit; granum, corn; comprimo, cramp, crump, crumple, crinkle.

Some may seem harsher, yet may not be rejected, for it at least appears, that some of them are derived from proper names, and there are others whose etymology is acknowledged by every body, as, Alexander, Elic, Seaver, Sander, Sandy, Sanny; Elizabeth, Elizabeth, Elisabeth, Betty, Bess; Margareta, Margaret, Marget, Meg, Peg; Maria, Mary, Mal, Pal, Malkin, Mawkin, Mawke; Matthæus, Mattha, Mather; Martinus, Matt, Pat; Gauincinus, Wilhelmus, Gio-lano, Cucilaune, William, Will, Bill, Wäkin, Wicken, Wicks, Wecks.

Thus cariophyllus, flos; gerofilo, Ital-girillee, giloter, Fr. gilliflowee, which the vulgar call julyflower, as it derived from the month July; petroselinum, parsley; portulacæ, parsana; cydonium, quince; cydoniatum, quiddens; persicium, peach; cruca, cruck, which they do capt to ear-wig, as if it took its name from the ear; annulus geminus, a gemmal, or gambal-ring; and thus the word gimbal and jumbal is transferred to other things thus interwoven; quelques choses, kickshaws. Since the origin of these, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any one, if the ancients have thus disfigured many, especially as they so much affected monosyllables; and, to make them sound the softer, took this liberty of maiming, taking away, changing, transposing, and softening them.

But while we derive these from the Latin, I do not mean to say, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Danish, Dutch, and Teutonic languages, and other dialects, and some taken more lately from the French or Italians, or Spaniards.

The same word, according to its different significations, often has a different origin; as, to bear a burden, from fero; but to bear, whence birth, born, bairn, come from pario; and a bear, at least if it be of Latin original, from fera. Thus perch, a fish, from perca; but perch, a measure, from pertica, and likewise to perch. To spell is from syllaba; but spell, an enchantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries are so fixed in lands, that none can pass them against the master's will, from expello; and spell, a messenger, from epistola; whence gospel, goodspell, or goldspell. Thus freeze, or freeze, from frigesco; but freeze, an architectonic word, from zophorus; but freeze, for cloth, from Frizia, or perhaps from frigesco, as being more fit than any other for keeping the cold.

There are many words among us, even monosyllables, compounded of two or more words, at least serving instead of compounds, and comprising the signification of more words than one: as, from scrip and roll, comes scroll; from proud and dance, prance; from st of the verb stay or stand, and out, is made stout; from stout and hardy, sturdy; from sp of spit or spew, and out, comes spout; from the same sp, with the termination in, is spin; and adding out, spin out; and from the same sp, with it, is spit, which only differs from spout, in that it is smaller, and with less noise and force; but sputter is, because of the obscure u, something between spit and spout; and by reason of adding r, it intimates a frequent iteration and noise, but obscurely confused: whereas sputter, on account of the sharper and clearer vowel u, intimates a more distinct noise, in which it chiefly differs from sputter. From the same sp, and the termination ark, comes spark, signifying a single emission of fire with a noise; namely, sp the emission, ar the more acute noise, and k the mute consonant, intimates its being suddenly terminated; but adding l, is made the frequentative sparkle. The same sp, by adding r, that is spr, implies a more lively impetus of diffusing or expanding itself; to which adding the termination ing, it becomes spring; its vigour spr imports, its sharpness the termination ing, and lastly in acute and tremulous, ending in the mute consonant g, denotes the sudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary signification, of a single, not a complicated exultion. Hence we call spring whatever has an elastic force; as also a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to spring, to germinate; and spring, one of the four seasons. From the same spr and out, is formed sprout, and with the termination ig, sprig; of which the following, for the most part, is the difference; sprout, of a grosser sound, imports a fatter or grosser bud; sprig, of a slender sound, denotes a smaller shoot. In like manner, from str of the verb strive, and out, comes strout, and strut. From the same str, and the termination uggle, is made struggle; and this gl imports, but without any great noise, by reason of the obscure sound of the vowel u. In like manner, from throw and roll is made troll; and almost in the same sense is trundle, from throw or thrust, and rundle. Thus graff or grough is compounded of grave and rough; and trudge from tread or trot, and drudge.

In these observations it is easy to discover great sagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the desire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often so made, that by the same licence any language may be deduced from any other.

2. That he makes no distinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and those which, being copied from other languages, can therefore afford no example of the genius of the English language, or its laws of derivation.

3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harshness and violence, words apparently Teutonic; and therefore, according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.

4. That some of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

SYNTAX.

The established practice of grammarians requires that I should here treat of the Syntax; but our language has so little inflection or variety of terminations, that its construction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis, therefore, has totally neglected it; and Jonson, whose desire of following the writers upon the learned languages made him think a syntax indispensably necessary, has published such petty observations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and person: as, Thou fliest from good; He runs to death.

Our adjectives are invariable.

Of two substantives the noun possessive is the genitive; as, His father's glory; The sun's heat.

Verbs transitive require an oblique case: as, He love's me; You fear him.

All prepositions require an oblique case: He gave this to me; He took this from me; He says this of me; He came with me.

PROSODY.

It is common for those that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit the Prosody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Buonmattei; that of the French by Desmarais; and that of the English by Wallis, Cooper, and even by Jonson, though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to insert them.

Prosody comprises orthoepy, or the rules of pronunciation; and orthometry, or the laws of versification.

PRO NUNCIATION is just, when every letter has its proper sound, and when every syllable has its proper accent, or, which in English versification is the same, its proper quantity.

The sounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not easily to be given, being subject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I shall here propose.

1. Of dissyllables, formed by affixing a termination, the former syllable is commonly accented, as childish, kingdom, âctest, âcted, toilsome, lover, scôffer, fairer, foremost, zealous, fûlness, godly, meekly, artist.

2. Dissyllables formed by prefixing a syllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as, to bring, to beset, to beset, to beset.

3. Of dissyllables: which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former syllable; as, to descend, a descent; to cement, a cement, to contract, a contract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs seldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter syllable; as, delight, perfume.

4. All dissyllables ending in y, as crány; in our, as, labour, favour; in ore, as willow, wallow, except allow; in ee, as battle, bible; in ish, as banish; in ck, as cambrick, cássock; in ter, as to batter; in age, as courage; in en, as fasten; in et, as quiet; accent the former syllable.

5. Dissyllable nouns in er, as canker, bitter, have the accent on the former syllable.

6. Dissyllable verbs terminating in a consonant and e final, as comprise, escape; or having a diphthong in the last syllable, as appease, reveal; or ending in two consonants, as attend; have the accent on the latter syllable.

7. Dissyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter syllable, have commonly their accent on the latter syllable, as applause, except words in ain, certain, mountain.

8. Trissyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a syllable, retain the accent of a radical word; as, loveliness, tenderness, contemner, waggoner, physical, bespatter, commenting, commending, assuivance.

9. Trissyllables ending in ous, as gracious, arduous; in al, as capital; in ion, as mention, accent the first.

10. Trissyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the first syllable, as countenance, armament, imminent, elegant, propogate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the last, as connivance, acquaintance; or the middle syllable hath a vowel before two consonants, as promulgate.

11. Trissyllables ending in y, as entity, specific, liberty, victory, subsidy, commonly accent the first syllable.

12. Trissyllables in re or le accent the first syllable, as légible, théâtre, except disciple, and some words which have a position, as exámple, épístle.

13. Trissyllables in ude commonly accent the first syllable, as plénitude.

14. Trissyllables ending in ator or atur, as créateur, or having the middle syllable a diphthong, as endeávoir, or a vowel before two consonants, as doméstic, accent the middle syllable.

15. Trissyllables that have their accent on the last syllable are commonly French, as acquéísce, repartée, magazine, or words formed by prefixing one or two syllables to an acute syllable, as immature, overcharge.

16. Polysyllables; or words of more than three syllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as arrogating, continency, incontinently, commendable, communicableness. We should therefore say disputable, indisputable, rather than disputable, indisputable, and advertisement, rather than advertisement.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as salvation, perturbation, concótion; words in atur or ator on the penult, as delicátor.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the first syllable, as amicable, unless the second syllable have a vowel before two consonants, as combustible.

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as uxórious, vóluptuous.

20. Words ending in ty have their accent on the antepenult, as pusillánimity, activity.

These rules are not advanced as complete or infallible, but proposed as useful. Almost every every rule of every language has its exceptions; and in English, as in other tongues, much must be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and better rules may be given that have escaped my observation.

VERSIFICATION is the arrangement of a certain number of syllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verses are either iambick, as alóft, créate; or trochaick, as hóly, lósty.

Our iambick measure comprises verses Of four syllables.

Most good, most fair,
Or things as rare,
To call you's lost:
For all the cost

Words can bestow,
So poorly snow
Upon your praise,
That all the ways
Sense hath, comes short Drayton.
With ravish'd ears
The monarch hears. Dryden.

Of six,
This while we are abroad,
Shall we not touch our lyre?
Shall we not sing an ode?
Or shall that holy fire,
In us that strongly glow'd,
In this cold air expire?

Though in the utmost peak,
A while we do remain,
Amongst the mountains bleak,
Exposed to sleet and rain,
No sport our hours shall break,
To exercise our vein.

What though bright Phœbus' beams
Refresh the southern ground,
And though the princely Thames
With beauteous nymphs abound,
And by old Camber's streams
Be many wonders found:

Yet many rivers clear
Here glide in siver swathes,
And what of all most dear,
Buxton's delicious baths.
Strong ale and noble cheer,
T' asswage breem winter's scathes.

In places far or near,
Or famous, or obscure,
Where wholesome is the air,
Or where the most impure,
All times, and every where,
The muse is still in ure. Drayton.

Of eight, which is the usual measure for short poems.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage.
The hairy gown, and mossy cell,
Where I may sit, and nightly spell
Of ev'ry star the sky doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew.

Milton.

Of ten, which is the common measure of heroick and tragick poetry.

Full in the midst of this created space,
Betwixt heav'n, earth, and skies, there stands a place
Confining on all three; with triple bound Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,
And thither bring their undulating sound.
The palace of loud Fame, her seat of pow'r.

Plac'd on the summit of a lofty tow'r;
 A thousand winding entries long and wide
 Receive of fresh reports a flowing tide.
 A thousand crannies in the walls are made;
 Nor gate nor bars exclude the busy trade.
 'Tis built of brass, the better to diffuse
 The spreading sounds, and multiply the news;
 Where echoes in repeated echoes play;
 A mart forever full; and open night and day.
 Nor silence is within, nor voice express,
 But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease;
 Confus'd, and chiding, like the hollow roar
 Of tides, receding from th'insulted shore;
 Or like the broken thunder heard from far,
 When Jove to distance drives the rolling war.
 The courts are filled with a tumultuous din,
 Of crowds, or issuing forth, or ent'ring in,
 A thorough-fare of news; where some devise
 Things never heard, some mingle truth with lies;
 The troubled air with empty sounds they beat,
 Intent to hear, and eager to repeat.

Dryden.

In all these measures the accents are to be placed on even syllables; and every line considered by itself is more harmonious, as this rule is more strictly observed. The variations necessary to pleasure belong to the art of poetry, not to the rules of grammar.

Our trochaick measures are

Of three syllables;

Here we may
 Think and pray,
 Before death
 Stops our breath:
 Other joys
 Are but toys. Walton's Angler.

Of five.

In the days of old,
 Stories plainly told,
 Lovers felt annoy. Old Ballad.

Of seven.

Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
 Urge not thus your haughty birth.

Waller.

In these measures the accent is to be placed on the odd syllables.

These are the measures which are now in use, and above the rest those of seven, eight, and ten syllables. Our ancient poets wrote verses sometimes of twelve syllables, as Drayton's Polyolbion.

Of all the Cambrian shires their heads that bear so high.

And farth'st survey their soils with an ambitious eye.

Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchless crowd,

The nearest that are said to kiss the wand-ring clouds,

Especial audience craves, offended with the throng,

That she of all the rest neglected was so long;

Alleging for herself, when through the Saxon's pride,

The godlike race of Brute to Severn's setting side

Were cruelly inforc'd, her mountains did relieve

Those whom devouring war else every where did grieve.

And when all Wales beside (by fortune or by might)

Unto her ancient foe resign'd her ancient right,

A constant maiden still she only did remain,

The last her genuine laws which stoutly did retain.

And as each one is prais'd for her peculiar things,

So only is she rich, in mountains, meres,
 and springs;

And holds herself as great in her superfluous waste,

As others by their towns, and fruitful tillage grac'd.

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer.

And as the mind of such a man, that hath a long way gone,

And either knoweth not his way, or else would let alone

His purpos'd journey is distract.

The measures of twelve and fourteen syllables were often mingled by our old poets, sometimes in alternate lines, and sometimes in alternate couplets.

The verse of twelve syllables, called an Hexandrine, is now only used to diversify heroick lines.

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestick march, 'and ener-

The pause in the Alexandrine must be at the sixth syllable.

The verse of fourteen syllables is now broken into a soft lyrick measure of verses, consisting alternately of eight syllables and six.

She to receive thy radiant name,
Selects a whiter space. Penton.

When all shall praise, and ev'ry lay
Devote a wreath to thee,
That day, for come it will, that day
Shall I lament to see. Lewis to Pope.

Beneath this tomb an infant lies
To earth whose body lent,
Hereafter shall more glorious rise,
But not more innocent.

When the Archangel's trump shall blow,
And souls to bodies join,
What crowds shall wish their lives
below,

Has been as short as thine! Wesley.

We have another measure very quick and lively, and therefore much used in songs, which may be called the anapest-ick, in which the accent rests upon every third syllable.

May I govern my passions with absolute sway,
And grow wiser and better as life wears away. Dr. Pope.

In this measure a syllable is often re-trenched from the first foot, as Diogenes surly and proud. Dr. Pope.

When present, we love, and when absent agree,
I think not of Paris, nor Paris of me.

Dryden.

These measures are varied by many combinations, and sometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroick measure.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us,
'Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter,

And intimates eternity to man. Addison.
So in that of eight syllables,
They neither added nor confounded,
They neither wanted nor abounded. Prior.

In that of seven,
For resistance I could fear none,
But with twenty ships had done,
What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
Hast achiev'd with six alone. Glover.

In that of six,
'Twas when the seas were roaring,
With hollow blasts of wind,
A damsel lay deploring,
All on a rock reclin'd. Gay.

In the anapestick,
When terrible tempests assail us,
And mountainous billows affright,
Nor power nor wealth can avail us,
But skilful industry steers right.

Ballad.

To these measures, and their laws, may be reduced every species of English verse.

Our versification admits of few licenses, except a synalapha, or elision of e in the before a vowel, as th' eternal; and more rarely of o in to, as d'accept; and a synare-sis, by which two short vowels coalesce in to one syllable, as question, special; or a word is contracted by the expulsion of a short vowel before a liquid, as av'rice, temprance.

Thus have I collected rules and examples, by which the English language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taught by a master to those that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for such as are not yet initiated in the schools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at last ineffectual.
